Texas drug case: An undercover agent in a sting that sent dozens of black people in Tulsa, Texas, to prison on bogus drug charges was convicted of one of two perjury counts, and a jury recommended he serve probation.

Tom Coleman was acquitted Friday of testifying falsely in a 2003 hearing that as a sheriff's deputy he never stole gas from county pumps, but he was found guilty of saying that he did not learn about the theft charge against him until August 1998.

Jurors sentenced him to seven years in prison, but because he didn't have any prior felony convictions decided that he could serve the time on probation.

The judge agreed and will rule Tuesday on the length and terms of the sentence.

Pa. mine accident: A map of an abandoned mine that might have prevented a flood that trapped nine miners underground for 77 hours had been tucked away in a coal company closet and forgotten, a government report shows.

The nine-man team of miners working in the Queecreek, Pa., mine in July 2002 had an outdated map that didn't show the exact location of the adjacent Saxman mine, which was filled with millions of gallons of water.

The miners pierced the wall of the Saxman mine, quickly filling part of the Queecreek mine with water and trapping the miners. Crews were eventually able to pull them out one-by-one in a dramatic rescue that made international headlines.

Cholesterol drugs: The U.S. government has until next month to decide whether to allow over-the-counter sales of a cholesterol drug — something an advisory panel says is a bad idea, at least for now.

The safety of Mevacor, well-established, but advisers worried the wrong people might take it if it sat on open drugstore shelves, particularly after an aggressive advertising campaign.

The panel voted 20-3 Friday to recommend against nonprescription sales that had been requested by a pair of drug companies.

Supporters argued that helping Mevacor more easily available would help keep heart disease treatment to millions of Americans at moderate risk of heart disease who needed to lower cholesterol levels but were not taking helpful drugs.

S.C. train wreck: Thousands of residents evacuated from their Graniteville, S.C., homes after chlorine gas leaked from a train wreck more than a week ago were back in their homes Saturday, but hundreds more waited to return.

More than 4,000 of the 5,400 evacuated residents had returned to their homes by Saturday, officials said. Other residents' homes remained off-limits because they were closer to the chemical spill that killed nine people and injured 250 more on Jan. 6. Evacuations began after a Norfolk Southern train slammed into a parked train, puncturing a tank of chlorine gas. A preliminary investigation determined the crew that parked a two-car train on a spur rail failed to switch the tracks back to the main rail.

USS Cole bombing: Hearings into a court appeal by the only people convicted in the 2000 USS Cole al-Qaida bombing ended Saturday and a judge said he will issue his verdict next month.

Four Yemenis were sentenced in September to prison sentences ranging from five to 10 years. Two men — Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri, a Saudi suspected of being an associate of Osama bin Laden, and Yemeni militiaman Jamal al-Badawi — were sentenced to death.

The six were the first people convicted in the attack on the Cole, which killed 17 Amer-

Makgatho Mandela died of AIDS-related complications. Among the 4,000 people who attended the funeral at the former president's Eastern Cape home were his former wife Winnie Madikizela-Mandela, South African President Thabo Mbeki and Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

War crimes suspect: Bosnia's top international official on Sunday welcomed Bosnian Serb authorities' first-ever transfer of a war crimes suspect to the U.N. war crimes tribunal, saying he hoped others would soon follow.

Bosnia's top international administrator, Paddy Ashdown, applauded Saturday's arrest of Savo Todovic, 52, who is wanted for killings and beatings in a Serb-run prison in Foca, eastern Bosnia.

Governments across the Balkans face mounting international pressure to capture and hand over war crimes suspects wanted for their alleged roles in wars during the 1990s.

Ukraine election: In a sign of emerging cracks in the camp of presidential election winner Viktor Yushchenko, a top ally criticized his call on supporters to raze the downtown tent camp they've occupied for nearly two months, one of the most vivid symbols of Ukraine's "Orange Revolution."

Yulia Tymoshenko, a fiery orator and a key driving force behind a wave of opposition protests that paved way for Yushchenko's Dec. 26 victory, urged him to respect the residents of the tent camp, many of whom were disappointed by Yushchenko's call to leave.

The sprawling camp on Kiev's main avenue sprang up within hours after the Nov. 21 presidential runoff vote to house protesters alleging massive fraud.

Many of about 1,000 remaining residents of the camp defied Yushchenko's order to disperse and vowed to stay until his inauguration.

Nobel prize winner summoned: Nobel peace laureate Shirin Ebadat told Iran's hard-line Revolutionary Court on Saturday she won't obey a summons to appear, even if it means her arrest — an open challenge to a powerful body that has convicted many pro-reform intellectuals.

Ebadat, the first Iranian and Muslim woman to win the Nobel Peace Prize, vowed in an interview with The Associated Press to resist hard-line threats against her life.

She said she wrote to the Revolutionary Court on Saturday, telling it she would not adhere to the summons, which was issued Wednesday and ordered her to appear within three days.

The Revolutionary Court, which deals with security crimes, ordered Ebadat to appear for "some explanations" or face arrest.

N. Korea nuclear talks: North Korea denied that it has a secret uranium-enrichment program and accused Washington of double standards, a day after it indicated a willingness to rejoin six-nation nuclear disarmament talks.

Calling the United States a "nuclear criminal," North Korea's state-run newspaper Rodong Sinmun accused Washington on Saturday of "conniving at, patronizing and cooperating with the pro-American forces" in Israel, Japan and South Korea to develop nuclear arms.

Whether the communist North should allow inspections to verify if, as the United States claims, it is running a clandestine uranium enrichment program in addition to its plutonium-based weapons facilities, is one of the thorniest issues in the stalled six-nation nuclear talks.

Sudan peace agreement: President Omar el-Bashir vowed that the Sudanese army, which fought rebels in the south for more than 20 years, would now defend the peace agreement concluded earlier this month with those same rebels.

El-Bashir spoke Saturday evening to government troops at a garrison in the southern Bahr El-Ghazal state during his tour to laud the peace agreement signed with the Sudan People's Liberation Army, the official Sudan News Agency reported.

El-Bashir's government and the SPLA signed the peace treaty Jan. 9 to end Africa's longest war, which began in 1983 after southerners rebelled, seeking autonomy and control of their resources. Sectarian and ethnic divisions overlaid the conflict that pitted the black, mostly Christian and animist southerners against the Arab and Islamic north.

Parmaut scandal: The founder and former CEO of Parmaut said he was aware of his group's financial difficulties, but not of the real situation of its balance sheet, a newspaper reported Sunday.

According to La Repubblica, Calisto Tanzi also said he was convinced that his "genius" ideas would counterbalance what he described as insufficient financial management skills at the company.

La Repubblica quoted what it said were excerpts from a handwritten memo from Tanzi to Parma prosecutors investigating the financial scandal that has engulfed the Italian oil giant. The remarks were published a day after Tanzi publicly apologized to those who suffered losses in the fraud and pledged to help prosecutors reconstruct the case.

U.S. forces launch raids in northern Iraq

Troops work to secure Mosul amid unease about upcoming elections

BY JASON KEYSER
The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — U.S. forces carried out a series of raids in Iraq's troubled northern city of Mosul, the military said Sunday, as American and Iraqi authorities scramble to prepare for elections there in the face of mass resignations of polling staff and police.

A Bradley fighting vehicle was damaged Sunday in the city when an explosion occurred as a U.S. convoy passed by, witnesses said. It was unclear whether there were casualties.

U.S. Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz acknowledged that the security threat to the Jan. 30 election was worse than in last October's nationwide balloting in Afghanistan and that it was impossible to guarantee "absolute security" against the "extraordinary intimidation that the enemy is undertaking."

In the Mosul area, the U.S. Army's Stryker Brigade Combat Team detained 11 suspected insurgents, including an alleged cell leader, and seized weapons and bomb-making material in several weekend raids — part of the military's strategy to try to secure the city short of launching an all-out offensive.

East of Mosul, a Katyusha rocket slammed into a home near the Kurdish regional parliament building in Irbil where leaders of the two main Kurdish parties were meeting to discuss the election, a police official said Sunday.

The Mosul area has emerged as a major flashpoint between U.S. and Iraqi forces and the insurgents, raising fears that the election cannot be held in much of the city, Iraq's third largest.

U.S. and Iraqi officials are scrambling to recruit new police and election workers in Mosul after thousands of them resigned in the face of rebel intimidation. A new police chief was appointed a week ago to command a force of barely 1,000. Last November the city had 4,000 police.

Similar mass resignations are believed to have occurred in other Sunni Muslim areas of northern, central and western Iraq.

"I would underscore that there was intimidation in Afghanistan — the Taliban threatened all

U.S. deaths in Iraq

The Associated Press

As of Saturday, at least 1,362 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count. At least 1,071 died as a result of hostile action, the Defense Department said.

The figures include three military civilians.

The AP count is four higher than the Defense Department's tally, last updated at 10 a.m. Friday.

The British military has reported 76 deaths: Italy, 19; Poland, 16; Ukraine, 16; Spain, 11; Bulgaria, seven; Slovakia, three; Estonia, Thailand and the Netherlands, two each; and Denmark, El Salvador, Hungary, Latvia and Kazakhstan one death each.

Since May 1, 2003, when President Bush declared that major combat operations in Iraq had ended, 1,224 U.S. military members have died, according to AP's count. That includes at least 962 deaths resulting from hostile action, according to the military's numbers.

The latest deaths reported by the military:

■ A Marine was killed in action Saturday in Babil province.

■ A Marine assigned to the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force was killed Friday in a nonhostile accident in Anbar province.

kinds of violence against people who registered or people who voted," Wolfowitz told reporters Sunday in Jakarta, Indonesia. "But I don't believe they ever got around to shooting election workers in the street or kidnapping the children of political candidates."

cally, police Lt. Adnan Abdul-Allah said.

In Ramadi, five explosions rocked a joint U.S.-Iraqi National Guard base, sending columns of smoke rising above the area, witnesses said. Sporadic clashes were reported in the city center.

Elsewhere, U.S. troops fired on a car that sped toward them near the central city of Samarra on Sunday morning, wounding two people, the military said. A spokesman said ground troops fired warning shots before aiming directly at the vehicle. The driver and a passenger were wounded.

Iraqi police and several witnesses, however, reported that four people were killed and that the vehicle was hit by tank fire.

A major insurgent group claimed responsibility Sunday for kidnapping 15 Iraqi National Guard members who were reported missing last week. The 15 guardsmen had been pulled from a bus near their base in the town of Hit, 90 miles west of Baghdad.

A statement posted on an Islamic Web site took responsibility on behalf of Ansar al-Sunnah.

"Your brothers were able to carry off a well-turned ambush against the crusaders' right hand in Iraq," the statement said, using "crusaders" as a term for Western forces.

It gave no indication of the men's fate. The authenticity of the claim could not be immediately verified.

Ansar al-Sunnah has claimed responsibility for numerous attacks, including a December suicide bombing that killed 22 people, most of them Americans, at a U.S. military dining tent on a base in Mosul.

The group is also blamed in the August executions of 12 Nepalese construction workers and twin suicide bombings in February that killed 109 members of Iraq's assertive Kurd minority.

Elsewhere, about 300 followers of radical Shiite Muslim cleric Muqtada al-Sadr began a three-day sit-in in front of the Oil Ministry in Baghdad to protest gasoline shortages that have caused hours-long waits at gas stations.

About a dozen of them entered the ministry and complained to Minister Tahir Ghadban, asking why U.S. troops have fuel for their vehicles and Iraqis don't.

Oil to flow again through damaged northern pipeline

The Associated Press

BAGHDAD — Almost a month after saboteurs shut down a northern Iraqi oil pipeline, the government said Sunday it should resume pumping crude from northern fields to an export terminal in southeastern Iraq by month's end.

A Dec. 18 explosion caused by saboteurs halted the flow of oil through the northern pipeline, which was carrying about 400,000 barrels a day before the attack.

"Repair work on the damaged export pipeline that carries crude oil from Kirkuk oil fields to the Turkish port of Ceyhan is expected to finish in 10 days time from now," the Oil Ministry statement said.

"Exports via the pipeline to Turkey's Ceyhan port are expected to resume immediately after completing repair work."

The statement also said a damaged feeder pipeline that carries crude oil from Kirkuk oil fields to the Beiji refinery, in northern Iraq, has been repaired and has started resupplying the refinery with 300,000 barrels a day.

Iraq's northern pipeline has been the target of repeated insurgent attacks, and the storage facilities at Ceyhan, Turkey, ran dry last month.

Iraq's State Oil Marketing Organization last week informed customers it would reduce southern term export contracts by about 10 percent, or 160,000-170,000 barrels a day, for five months due to insurgent attacks, bad weather hampering the southern export terminals' operations and demurrage costs.

The organization's chief, Dhia al-Bakka, said last month that exports averaged 1.55 million barrels a day in 2004, with 1.43 million barrels coming from the south and 120,000 from the north.

The annual average export level fell below the target of 1.85 million barrels a day because of the country's deteriorating security situation.

Recovery team picks up pieces after attacks

BY JASON CHUDY

Stars and Stripes

BAGHDAD—When a roadside or car bomb badly damages a vehicle, soldiers from Company B, 210th Forward Support Battalion, receive a call.

The battalion's 10-member vehicle recovery team is responsible for collecting inoperable vehicles in the 2nd Brigade, 10th Mountain Division's operating area around much of Baghdad.

"Most have been around central Baghdad," said Sgt. 1st Class Thomas McDiffitt, vehicle recovery team noncommissioned officer in charge. "Fifty to 60 percent have been on Route Irish (the road from central Baghdad to the airport), the rest were north and northwest Baghdad."

All told, the team has recovered more than 40 vehicles since the battalion arrived in Iraq last summer.

"The majority were (damaged) from IEDs or VBIEDs (roadside or car bombs)," McDiffitt said.

At best, these bombs have heavily damaged the vehicles; at worst, they've destroyed them. Either way, the soldiers have to go out and pick up what's left.

"They're pretty much blown up," said Spc. Brandon Beechler. "They're non-mission capable — tires flattened, doors missing, windows blown out."

Some have burned into nothing more than large hunks of twisted metal. The recovered vehicles will be sent to Kuwait for repairs or, if damaged beyond repair, kept at Camp Liberty.

Beechler drives the team's M1098 truck and "lowboy" trailer for many of the recoveries.

The unit keeps two wreckers and one lowboy on standby. They can also call the battalion's Company A to bring a pallet-loading truck for smaller vehicles.

Wrecker driver Spc. Terrence Valis said one trailer they recovered had 1,600 155mm artillery rounds in it. Some had fuses installed, so when they lifted the trailer for its trip back, Valis naturally worried. "If one had a fuse and falls we're gonna be suckin'," he remembered thinking.

The unit is able to carry any wheeled vehicles or trailers or tracked equipment, like a Bradley Fighting Vehicle, is picked up by another unit.

JASON CHUDY/Stars and Stripes

Six of the 10 members of the 210th Forward Support Battalion's vehicle recovery team stand in front of one of their wreckers. The unit sends between four and six soldiers to most vehicle recoveries.

They can be ready to leave their Camp Liberty base within about 30 minutes, McDiffitt said. Most recoveries don't take very long.

"If you've got good NCOs, when you get to the scene and they assess it pretty well, it'll take about 30 minutes," Beechler said.

Valis has attended the Army's formal vehicle recovery school. "There's a lot of stuff out there they can't teach you, so you have to (learn it as you go)," he said.

The unit doesn't provide its own security, so it is dependent on other units for protection. And because they're headed to a scene of a previous attack, there's usually a good possibility that there are still enemies nearby.

"I get kind of a rush — you don't know if you are going to get shot at or get hit by an IED," Valis said. "We've had a couple of shots popped off at us."

Even when they aren't shot at, the missions aren't usually pleasant — especially those involving suicide car bombers.

"I got a piece of [body] stuck in my boot and didn't know it," Valis said about one mission. "I looked down and there was a piece of the dude."

Hohenfels welcomes soldiers home from Afghanistan, Iraq

Above: Soldiers shoot some pool at a community welcome home party Tuesday in Hohenfels, Germany. The celebration was for Company A, 1st Battalion, 4th Infantry Regiment, which returned in December from Afghanistan, and soldiers from the Combat Maneuver Training Center Operations Group Grizzly and Timberwolves observer-controller teams, which returned from Iraq in November. "We were [in Afghanistan] to act as a security force for the elections and as a [quick reaction force] for the elections," said Sgt. 1st Class Scott Broxton, Company A, 1-4 Infantry. "There were times when you would think I really don't want to be here, but most of the time you realized how important it was to support our nation and be there for the elections."

Right: Family members and soldiers dig into lunch at the party. "We got home at midnight and most of the wives were there and a lot of people from the community were there," Broxton said. "The celebration was nice. It was really good of the community to do something like this for us."

Afghan prisoners stand at the Supreme Court after leaving the main U.S. base at Bagram in Kabul. The U.S. military on Sunday freed about 80 prisoners held in Afghanistan, which could help persuade supporters of the former Taliban government to give up their fight.

U.S. releases 80 Afghan prisoners

BY STEPHEN GRAHAM

The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — The U.S. military on Sunday freed about 80 prisoners held in Afghanistan, and the country's most senior judge said the government was negotiating for the release of hundreds more Afghans from American custody.

In a move which could help a reconciliation drive with former Taliban, two buses brought the 80 Afghan men from the main U.S. base at Bagram to the Supreme Court in the capital, Kabul, where they were received by the chief justice.

Fazl Hadi Shinwari congratulated them on their freedom and told them to be grateful to return to their families for the Muslim feast of Eid al-Adha, which begins Thursday.

"Don't sabotage the security or the government and God will be pleased with you," the white-bearded cleric told the men, seated in a hall at the court before they were allowed to complete their journeys home.

An aide to president Hamid Karzai, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the prisoners had been held either at Bagram, at a U.S. base in the southeastern city of Khost or at Kandahar in the south. Court officials initially announced that the men were from the U.S. jail at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, but later said they were mistaken.

American and allied Afghan forces captured thousands of suspected Taliban and al-Qaida members in Afghanistan during and since the bombing campaign which ousted the repressive Taliban government in late 2001.

Hundreds have been classified as "enemy combatants" and transferred to the prison at the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo, while many others have been held at American bases in Afghanistan.

The U.S. military has suggested it is minimizing detentions and that a reconciliation program to be organized by Karzai's government could reduce the numbers further.

Granter sentenced to 10 years for Iraqi prison abuse role

Granter to be dishonorably discharged after release

BY T.A. BADGER

The Associated Press

FORT HOOD, Texas — Spc. Charles Granter Jr., the Army reservist shown smiling in photos beside naked Iraqi prisoners, was sentenced to 10 years in military prison after telling jurors he was ordered to abuse detainees and "didn't enjoy what I did there."

Granter, labeled the leader of a band of rogue guards at the Abu Ghraib prison, could have received 15 years behind bars in the first court-martial stemming from the scandal.

Asked if he felt remorse after the sentence was handed down on Saturday, Granter said, "There's a war on. Bad things happen."

Granter will be dishonorably discharged when his sentence is completed. He was demoted to private and ordered to forfeit all pay and benefits.

A day after convicting him, the jury of four Army officers and six senior enlisted men deliberated about two hours to determine Granter's sentence.

Granter, who had been free prior to trial, was taken into custody after the sentence was read. He gave his mother, Irma, a hug and his father, Charles Sr., a hand shake before the jury foreman read the sentence.

"He's scared to death," Irma Granter said later.

Granter was accused of stacking naked prisoners in a human pyramid and later ordering them to masturbate while other soldiers took photographs. He allegedly punched one man in the head hard enough to knock him out, and struck an injured prisoner where a collapsible metal stick. He was shown in one photo giving a thumbs-up sign next to a dead body packed in ice.

Defense lawyer Guy Womack said his client and the six other Abu Ghraib guards charged with abuses were being scapegoated.

"I firmly believe there have been reasonable doubt, but we respect their decision," he said outside the courthouse.

Prosecutors Maj. Michael Haley and Capt. Chris Graveline would not speak to reporters, but they said in a joint statement, "We think it is important that the world was able to observe this court-martial."

Under military court rules, Granter's case will be automatically appealed to the Army Court of Criminal Appeals. He also could request clemency from his commanding general.

Granter did not testify during his trial, but during the sentencing phase Saturday he took the witness stand to repeat the defense claim that the jury clearly rejected: that he had been ordered by intelligence agents at Abu Ghraib to abuse the prisoners to make them easier to interrogate.

Womack asked him why he was smiling in the infamous photos, some of which were shown while Granter spoke.

"I'm smiling now, and that's a nervous smile," Granter said.

"At the time my understanding is that they were so screwed up, if you didn't look at them as funny, there was no way to deal with it."

Granter described himself as a by-the-book prison guard corrupted by supervisors who ordered him to physically mistreat and sexually humiliate detainees.

He said he initially resisted pressure to mistreat prisoners, but his Army superiors made it clear to him that he was expected to obey the commands of the military and civilian intelligence agents who ran his part of Abu Ghraib.

Granter said a lieutenant in his unit told him: "If [military intelligence] asks you to do this, it needs to be done. They're in charge, follow their orders."

He said he now knows that those orders were unlawful, but "at the time my understanding is that they were [lawful], or I wouldn't have done them," he said.

The 36-year-old reservist from Uniontown, Pa., spoke for nearly three hours as an "unsworn statement," meaning he was not subject to cross-examination by prosecutors. He did not testify during his trial.

He concluded by saying: "I didn't enjoy what I did there. ... A lot of it was wrong, a lot of it was criminal."

Holley, the co-prosecutor, said in his final statement that Granter was a disgrace to the military and urged the 10 jurors to send him to prison for the maximum sentence.

More ex-Taliban may return to Afghanistan

BY STEPHEN GRAHAM

The Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — Improving security in Afghanistan's most troubled region is boosting the outlook for a reconciliation between former Taliban supporters and the U.S.-backed government of President Hamid Karzai, the head of the U.N. refugee agency says.

In an interview with the Associated Press, Rund Lubbers also said eased-up American military operations could encourage more militants to give up the fight and return from countries such as Pakistan.

"The big shots of the Taliban will of course stay out because they will be imprisoned immediately," Lubbers, the U.S. High Commissioner for Refugees, said Saturday. But among the rank-and-file, "I think there will see more" willingness to return, he said.

Karzai has dismissed a stubborn Taliban-led insurgency as a minor threat, and repeatedly called for low- and mid-rank members to make peace and help rebuild Afghanistan after more than two decades of war.

Government officials claim many have since signaled their wish to come back from neighboring countries, and the top U.S. commander here told AP last month that a big repatriation could prompt a cut in his 18,000-strong force. But few appear to have taken the plunge.

Suggesting that could change this year, Lubbers said U.S. military operations, the recent closure of several refugee camps used as sanctuaries by militants and the planned reconciliation drive had improved security "considerably" along the border.

The military is engaged in a winter-long campaign to prevent militants from threatening elections planned for the spring.

Taliban supreme leader Mullah Omar and al-Qaida chief Osama bin Laden remain at large.

Still, U.S. troops are increasingly engaged in rebuilding Afghan security forces and carrying out badly needed reconstruction projects in areas deemed too dangerous by many civilian relief organizations.

Lubbers, who spoke after talks with Karzai at the end of a four-day visit, suggested that American offensive operations could now become "more selective" to create conditions for more Afghans to return.

"It will be very good to give some chance, some oxygen if you like, to normalcy in these regions [where] people are allowed to come back and are not in an atmosphere any more of confrontation," he said.

Thousands of Taliban supporters fled, many with their entire families, to Pakistan, Iran and other countries when a U.S. bombing campaign drove them from power in late 2001 for harboring bin Laden.

In all, about 3 million refugees have returned to Afghanistan since 2001.

Ibrahim, 9, holds his brother as they warm themselves by the fire near their tent set up in the former Russian culture house. Over 100 refugee families found shelter there in Kabul on Saturday.

Father's road to recovery scarred by grief

Marine's dad lives with daily pain, heartache after learning of son's death in Iraq and setting self afire

BY DAVID FINKEL

The Washington Post

BOSTON — Another day of trying to recover.

Once again, Carlos Arredondo, whose reaction to the death of his son became one of the iconic images of the Iraq war, is reading the last e-mail he received from him. "I'm in najaf," the e-mail from Marine Lance Cpl. Alexander Scott Arredondo begins, and those three words are enough to make a 44-year-old father once again feel as though he is on fire.

Every bit of Arredondo's skin is coated with antibiotic cream. His left palm has glass in it from when three Marines informed him that Alex was dead and he began smashing the windows of their van. His lower legs, which received the worst of the burns from when he splashed gasoline in the van and ignited it, are stained the color of cranberries. His hair, cut off in the hospital, is only now starting to grow back. His fingernails, ruined when he used his hands to claw holes in Alex's grave for flowers, are all gone.

"do me a favor and check the news online, save pictures articles and videos if you can. I'll stay in contact until I move. Let everyone know I love them," the e-mail from Alex goes on, and Arredondo continues to read it, oblivious to everything else, including his wife, Melida.

Even now, so many months later, no longer unconscious in a hospital burn unit, no longer restrained to his hospital bed as a precaution against suicide, no longer gasping as his skin is pulled off with tweezers, no longer encased in bandages, forgiven by the Marines, Arredondo says he does not know why he did what he did.

Was he trying to kill himself? Maybe, he says. He was trying to bring attention to his son's death, the 98th of the war? Maybe it was that. Was it an act of protest against a war he doesn't like? Maybe.

He says he understands the meaning of grief now; less clear to him is the meaning of recovery.

"How am I going to feel better? I miss you. I have no idea." It is a question not only for

Arredondo, but for all of the survivors of the more than 1,300 U.S. troops killed so far in the Iraq war, the relatives who in those first moments scream and weep and slam the door and collapse. "The beginning of the war" is how Maj. Scott Mack, whose platoon members delivered the news to Arredondo, describes it.

Where, then, is Arredondo in this, whose son is dead, whose other son won't talk to him, whose ex-wife is furious at him, whose wife is begging for money for him, and who spends most of his day in a room he has converted into a shrine? How far has he come? How far does he have to go? "I really love my son," he says, at the cemetery one day, stamping his foot three times on Alex's grave.

He visits the grave every other day. He has decorated it with roses, carnations, Alex's pictures, Alex's letters, a temporary headstone that he made from two discarded pieces of wood and 13 American flags.

"If he were to come right now, he would kiss me on the mouth, he would kiss me on the cheeks, he would kiss me on the mouth again," Arredondo says. "That's how we said hello."

Carlos Arredondo was, until Aug. 25 of last year, a healthy, normal man. He worked. He played soccer. He loved, rather than obsessed.

Alex was his firstborn, and the photos that Arredondo is constantly looking at show how close they were, at least in the first years of Alex's life. There they are at home, asleep next to each other, in a part of Boston called Jamaica Plain. There they are at Boston's swan boats. There they are in New York, on a playground near the World Trade Center. There they are in Costa Rica, visiting where Carlos was born.

He sneaked into the United States when he was 19. He married his first wife, Victoria, in 1983. In 1984 they had Alex, in 1987 they had Brian, and then came a divorce punctuated by accusations and a long-running custody battle, which still defines their relationship, even as they grieve. During Alex's teenage years, Arredondo was living in Florida with Melida, prohibited by court order from direct contact. He returned to Boston in 2000, resumed contact with his sons, moved back to Florida early last year to start a construction business, and, on Aug. 25, his birthday, just after lunch, was in the front yard of the house he and Brian bought, waiting for Alex to call, when here came the Marine van.

"We're looking for the family of Alexander Arredondo," he remembers one of the Marines saying. "I am the family," he said, and then "it was like my heart went all the way to the ground."

From the time of notification to the time of the fire took, he imagines, 20 minutes. He remembers running into the back yard, sitting in the grass, phoning Melida, phoning Brian, standing up, sitting back down and standing up again. He remembers going into the front yard and asking the Marines to leave. He remembers picking up a hammer, then splashing gasoline, and then igniting the torch, perhaps accidentally, perhaps intentionally, perhaps suicidally, perhaps, perhaps.

"And then, when I started getting a little more tranquil, because Melida was there, I think I passed out." The bill for the hospital with the burn unit was $43,710.46. The bill for the ambulance was $487.50. The bill for an initial psychological evaluation was $250. The bill for another hospital, whose emergency room he was taken to initially, was $9,952, the latest reminder of which has shown up in the day's mail. Melida, a nursing home administrator who has been out of work since Aug. 25, puts it in a stack of letters, including one from a hospital informing them that a lien has been placed on their house.

"Carlos," she says, "are we going to see Alex?"

"Yes," he says. In the bedroom, he coats himself with antibiotic cream and sunblock, and grabs a handful of Alex's letters to pass out to whomever he sees. In the living room, Melida says, not joking, exhausted, "I need to know — is this normal behavior?" They get in the car and drive past the church that donated furniture and rent money to them when they came back to Boston for the funeral and then decided to stay on for a while to be closer to Brian, who is living with Victoria in Bangor, Maine.

They turn onto the road they were driving along the day that Arredondo's mother, in the back seat, soon after the funeral, suddenly began kicking and screaming, and broke down in front of their eyes.

"I've never seen my mother like that," Arredondo says. Later, back home, while Melida works on arrangements for a fund-raiser, Arredondo receives a call from a friend of Alex who mentions that he recently spoke with Brian.

"You talked to him?" Arredondo says. "I haven't heard from him. In a month. He was quiet? He was taking it hard? Why do you say that? He sounded very sad?"

Next, he writes a letter. "Brian, please call me," he writes. "Come to visit. Please. I miss you. I love you very much. Call me. Your dad, Carlos L. Arredondo."

Next he calls Victoria. "This is Carlos," he says. "I would like to talk to you, please. And I need to talk to Brian, please. I would like to talk to all of you, please."

He hangs up. "They didn't pick up," he says. His hands are shaking. The doctors have told him to take deep breaths when this happens. He takes deep breaths. "What am I supposed to do now?" he says.

"I've already lost one son. Now I will lose another?"

Arredondo visits his son's grave site in Boston every other day.

Old maps may be cause of sub's accident

BY SIOBHAN McDONOUGH
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Outdated charts may have been partially at fault for the undersea grounding of a U.S. nuclear submarine last weekend, according to a U.S. agency that analyzes spy satellite imagery and produces maps and charts for the Defense Department.

Officials at the Bethesda, Md.-based National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency said Saturday the main chart likely used by the USS San Francisco didn't reveal any obstacle anywhere near where the boat struck on the floor of the Pacific Ocean during underwater operations last Saturday about 350 miles south of Guam.

The closest notation on the map indicates discolored water about three miles from the accident site. The discolored water was reported by the Japanese most likely in the 1960s or even earlier, according to David Burpee, the agency's spokesman.

The Defense Mapping Agency created the chart in 1989, and it was never revised. Burpee said a satellite photograph taken 10 years later could be read in hindsight to show an undersea mountain not on the chart, but that was not clear at the time and, in any case, the photo was just one among thousands of shots of ocean expanses that have not been fully charted using all the latest methods.

"The charts used today may not reflect the reality of what's actually on the ocean floor," said Burpee, adding that the charts used today were charted with earlier technology and may not be up-to-date.

"You think [the charts] are right until somebody tells you they're not," he said, adding that ships use sonar to pick up ocean forms and pass that information on to the agency.

close examination in the wake of the accident to indicate a submerged structure, such as a reef or a ridge, but also could have been read as showing variations in water color caused by dense growth of plankton or something dumped from a passing ship, such as oil.

"The chart is an imprecise mapping of the bottom to begin with," he said. "There hasn't been a formal hydrographic sweep through that area of the ocean's bottom."

Burpee said there are currently 150 ships in the world capable of doing that kind of thorough deep water work that would take all of them 30 years to map the world's deep water.

"It's not like there was one little area that got away from us, that escaped detection," he said. "This is part of a massive amount of sea that has not been mapped or charted in detail."

The emphasis in charting has been on the Northern Hemisphere because that's where the majority of commerce is, he said.

San Francisco's nuclear reactor was undamaged, and the submarine made its way back to its home port in Guam under its own power. Its outer hull was damaged, but its inner hull remained intact.

The submarine had been headed to Australia for a port visit.

Babylon unharmed

WARSAW, Poland — A Polish official on Sunday dismissed charges by the British Museum that multinational troops damaged the ancient Iraqi city of Babylon, saying soldiers took the utmost care to preserve archaeological sites after setting up camp there.

Polish troops in Babylon were accompanied by archaeologists, and Iraqi authorities responsible for the preservation of monuments were consulted on all work done at the military camp in the city, Defense Ministry spokesman Col. Piotr Pertek was quoted as saying by the PAP news agency.

"Neither Polish nor any other soldiers from the Polish-led multinational force ever performed any tasks that would ruin the monuments, cause devastation or any other harm," he reportedly said.

Iraqi air force flying

BAGHDAD — One of the Iraqi air force's defunct transport squadrons was formally reactivated on Sunday and received a delivery of three C-130E Hercules cargo planes from the United States, the U.S. military said.

Iraqi airmen celebrated the arrival of the planes by slaughtering five sheep in a ceremony at an airfield and marking the planes with blood.

The 23rd Iraqi air force squadron, first created in 1965, is responsible for airlifting military personnel and equipment.

About 65 air force personnel, including four flight crews, finished four months of initial training in neighboring Jordan. They'll receive additional instruction in flying and maintaining the aircraft from U.S. Air Force commanders in Iraq and on flight simulators in the United States.

Iraqi center will seek missing persons

Families searching for loved ones will get emotional and physical support

BY SHAFIKA MATTAR

The Associated Press

AMMAN, Jordan — Iraq plans to establish a center to assist the families of those who went missing during wars the country fought under fallen dictator Saddam Hussein, an Iraqi Cabinet official said Sunday.

Bekhtiar Amin, minister of human rights, spoke at a three-day meeting in Jordan to arrange details for the center.

"The center will assist the families to find their loved ones and determine their identities," Amin said. "Those families need social and psychological assistance.... They are trying to find the bones of their loved ones to rebury them in decent places."

The three-day meeting, which was to wrap up Sunday, was organized by Amin's ministry, the United Nations Assistance Mission in Iraq and the U.N. Development Program. At least 100 U.N. officials, family members of missing Iraqis and pathologists from Kuwait were present.

A meeting organizer and UNDP spokeswoman, Annie Dimirjian, said it was not certain when the center would open.

"We are hopeful to set it up as soon as possible," she told reporters. "But it all depends on the security issue."

Consultations on setting up the center started in July when the Iraqi Ministry of Human Rights expressed concern over the fate of persons who had fallen victims of arbitrary executions under Saddam's regime and those who went missing or disappeared in wars.

Arras Abed Akram, an Iraqi Kurd who attended the Jordan meeting, said he hoped to locate the remains of his family, who he believes were killed during Saddam's chemical attack on Halabja city in 1988.

"I don't know if my family members are buried there (a mass grave in Halabja), but I hope to find at least one of them alive or at least find their remains to bury them decently," he said in an interview.

Akram said his parents and 10 brothers and sisters — aged between 6 months and 20 years — were killed during the attack nearly 17 years ago.

1,500 people." Amin, the Iraqi minister, said in addition to the hundreds of thousands estimated killed in Halabja "there are 1.5 million disabled, 1.5 million displaced, 1 million who dropped out of school, 3,500 people with their noses and ears mutilated and a number of businessmen who had their hands chopped off."

"These people need psychological assistance and rehabilitation and we do not have the necessary centers for this purpose," Amin said. "We don't have pathologist labs and not a single DNA lab to enable us to identify the bodies we find in the mass graves."

He said he visited Bosnia, Kosovo and Kuwait to learn and look at their experience in this field. He said Western nations, including the United States and Canada, said they would assist in DNA tests.

Indonesia raises tsunami death toll by 5,000

Wolfowitz praises U.S. troops as second airport opens for relief missions

The Associated Press

BANDA ACEH, Indonesia — Some nations observed a minute of silence on Sunday to honor the dead three weeks after a devastating tsunami smashed coastlines across southern Asia and Africa, as Indonesia increased its death toll, bringing the figure for one of the worst-ever natural disasters to more than 162,000.

U.S. Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz on Sunday wrapped up a visit to hardest-hit Indonesia — where officials raised the death toll by 5,000 to more than 115,000 — to get a firsthand look at the devastation.

Jakarta, meanwhile, backed away from an earlier call for foreign troops delivering relief to be out of the country by March 26 — three months to the day after the earthquake and tsunami hit 11 nations.

"We would like to emphasize that March 26 is not a deadline for involvement of foreign military personnel in the relief effort," Defense Minister Juwono Sudarsono said after meeting Wolfowitz in Jakarta.

Wolfowitz praised American troops for their efforts to aid survivors and hinted that the American operation could presage closer military ties with Indonesia.

In the first floor of a tsunami-damaged hospital, a German doctor gets help from an interpreter to diagnose an elderly man having trouble breathing in Banda Aceh, Indonesia.

"We need to think about how we can strengthen this newly elected democratic government, strengthen the civilian defense minister ... to help build the kind of defense institution that will ensure in the future that the Indonesian military, like our military, is a loyal function of a democratic government," said Wolfowitz, a former U.S. ambassador to Jakarta.

The U.S. military will greatly wind down its presence in Thailand and Sri Lanka over the next week or two, Marine Lt. Gen. Robert Blackman, who is in charge of coordinating American relief efforts in South Asia, said Saturday. In Indonesia, U.S. forces are still working hard to deliver supplies to people in affected areas, he said.

Indonesia "is clearly the most challenging" of the three countries, Blackman said. "You can't minimize 130,000 deaths on the island of Sumatra."

Meanwhile, Australia and New Zealand — both of which lost vacationing citizens on the southern beaches of Thailand — observed the silence at the precise time the 9.0-magnitude earthquake struck. Bells tolled and flags flew at half-staff.

"Three weeks ago, the world began to watch in horror as a catastrophe without precedent in recent times unfolded around the Indian Ocean," said New Zealand's Prime Minister Helen Clark.

Indonesia's Social Affairs Ministry said 12,132 people were still missing as bodies continued to be pulled from the wreckage that was once coastal settlements. It said 603,518 were displaced — about 100,000 fewer than the figure three days ago.

The movement of relief supplies into Indonesia's northern Sumatra was expected to double with the opening of a second airport Sunday, as United Nations teams moved deeper into the interior to assess the plight of villagers who had fled the tsunami-devastated coastline.

The damaged airfield at Sabang Island, just off the northern tip of Sumatra, was back in operation with military C-130 transports from several nations scheduled to arrive in the coming days, said U.S. Navy spokesman, Lt. Cmdr. John Bernard.

NBC holds a star-studded benefit show

By DAVID BAUDER

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — With Norah Jones singing "we're all in this thing together," movie and music stars contributed their talents for a hastily arranged benefit for tsunami victims televised live on Saturday.

The two-hour program aired on NBC Universal-owned stations, with all donations going to the American Red Cross International Response Fund.

"We have a choice," Clint Eastwood said. "We can either look away or we can help."

Actors told stories about the tsunami, and NBC showed pictures of the effects of the devastating waves and the agony of children left behind.

Morgan Freeman told of a 60-year-old woman in Sri Lanka who survived for two weeks before being found by rescuers.

"Miracles do happen," he said. "You can be that miracle also."

PLO committee urges militants to end attacks

By RAVI NESSMAN

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — A top PLO decision-making body called on militant militants Sunday to halt attacks against Israel, charging that the violence gives Israel an excuse to carry out military operations.

The PLO Executive Committee issued its statement in Ramallah. It followed a militant attack late Thursday at the Karni crossing between Gaza and Israel that left six Israeli civilians dead, setting off Israeli reprisal raids in Gaza.

After the attacks, Israeli Prime Minister Sharon cut off contacts with the regime of Mahmoud Abbas, sworn in Saturday as Yasser Arafat's successor as head of the Palestinian Authority.

A senior Israeli official, speaking on condition of anonymity, downplayed the Palestinian statement, saying the Palestinians will be judged by their deeds and not their words.

In its statement, the PLO body called on militants to "stop all the military action that might harm our national goals and give the Israelis an excuse to obstruct Palestinian stability."

Abbas has spoken out against Palestinian violence but has rejected Israeli demands to confront the militant groups, preferring to negotiate a truce instead.

On Sunday, Sharon said he had ordered Israeli forces to intensify efforts to stop Palestinian attacks, adding that the military would act without restrictions until Palestinian leaders take action against militants themselves.

On Saturday, the Israeli military launched a broad raid into Gaza that killed five Palestinians. Three more Palestinians were killed in separate incidents.

For their part, militants fired homemade rockets Saturday at the Israeli town of Sderot, critically wounding a teenage girl. Hamas militants fired two more rockets at Sderot on Sunday. In the last two weeks, attacks in Gaza increased from 40 a week to 100, the military said.

"The army and the security forces have been instructed to increase operational activity to stop terrorism and they will continue to do so without restrictions — I emphasize without restrictions — so long as the Palestinians don't lift a finger," Sharon said. "The operational level has been instructed to take any step necessary to stop the terrorism."

Senior military officials said on condition of anonymity that the army was considering either a major raid into Gaza or several small operations against militants. The military prefers the second option, fearing a broad operation would ruin Abbas' chances for success, the officials said.

On Sunday night, a large explosion was heard in northern Gaza, residents said, but its cause was not immediately known. The Israeli military had no comment.

Palestinian Foreign Minister Nabil Shaath condemned the threatened military action.

"At the same time that Abu Mazen says he will work hard to return to the peace track, Sharon declares a military escalation," Shaath said, referring to Abbas by his other name. "I'm afraid Sharon will say that Abu Mazen is following Arafat's path and so they will not deal with Abu Mazen."

Palestinian Authority president Mahmoud Abbas attends a PLO Executive Committee meeting at the Ramallah, West Bank, headquarters of the late Yasser Arafat on Sunday. The committee has called on Palestinian militants to "stop all the military action that might harm our national goals."

Iran: Tests to show peaceful nuke program

By ALI AKBAR DAREINI

The Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran on Sunday said environmental samples taken this weekend by U.N. inspectors from a military complex will prove Tehran's nuclear program is peaceful.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Hamid Reza Asefi said inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency took samples from landscaped areas of the huge Parchin complex, which the United States alleges may be involved in nuclear weapons research.

They (inspectors) took some environmental samples from the open space at the complex and returned (to Vienna). Now, they have to present the outcome of their work to the agency," Asefi told reporters.

"We know what the result will be. Since we have never done any (nuclear) activity, definitely the result will prove our declarations," the spokesman said.

The IAEA had been pressing Tehran for months to be allowed to inspect the complex, long used to research, develop and produce ammunition, missiles and high explosives.

Iran had said it would allow U.N. experts to take environmental samples from green spaces outside the military complex's ammunition production workshops but that it wouldn't allow them to inspect military equipment.

Iranian officials also said before the visit that they would closely watch the inspectors to prevent any possible theft or spying at the military complex.

Croatians back at polls for runoff

BY SNJEZANA YUKIC

The Associated Press

ZAGREB, Croatia — Croatia's President Stipe Mesic is being challenged Sunday by a determined rival, Cabinet minister Jadranka Kosor, in a runoff election to choose the president that could lead this former Yugoslav country to join the European Union.

Mesic, 70, praised by many at home and abroad for moving the country closer to the West, missed outright re-election by just one percentage point, receiving about 49 percent of the votes in the first round on Jan. 2.

Kosor, 51, the minister in charge of families and war veterans, came in second with 20 percent. She has since waged a fervent campaign that included massive advertisements, concerts and bold attacks on Mesic as she seeks to become Croatia's first woman president.

About 4.4 million people — including 400,000 Croats living abroad — were registered to vote Sunday at about 6,700 polling stations that opened at 7 a.m. and were scheduled to close 12 hours later.

By 11 a.m., just above 15 percent of voters cast their ballots. In the first round, the total turnout was low, at about 50 percent.

Since Mesic and Kosor share a similar political agenda, the choice comes down to their personalities and political affiliation.

Mesic is backed by the country's center-left opposition, while Kosor comes from the governing Croatian Democratic Union, which returned to power a year ago after distancing itself from its nationalist roots to become a pro-European conservative group.

Croatian President Stipe Mesic casts his ballot at a polling station in Zagreb, Croatia, on Sunday. The Croatians are electing a new president in this second and final round of voting.

Mesic is "decisive, consistent and yet such a nice person — a true leader," said Zlatko Najman, 47, a construction technician, casting his ballot in downtown Zagreb. His wife, Gorana, 47, added that Kosor is "just a prolonged hand of her party."

But Bruno Covic, 49, a retired war veteran, said he opted for Kosor because, "we need a change every now and then. Let new people bring new ideas."

Both Mesic and Kosor are seen as pro-Western, pledging support for Croatia's accession to the EU and good relations with the United States. They pledge to cooperate fully with the U.N. war crimes court — a key condition for Croatia to open EU membership talks on March 17 to join by the end of the decade.

Opinion polls were predicting Mesic to win, with up to 60 percent.

Italian railway set for strike

ROME — Railway workers prepared Sunday to stage a 24-hour strike to press demands for improved safety measures following the Jan. 7 head-on crash between a freight train and a passenger train on a single track near Bologna that killed 17. Five of the victims were train workers, the others were passengers.

The strike was scheduled to start at 9 p.m. Sunday, although railway company Trenitalia said minimum service would be guaranteed during the walkout, especially during Monday's morning and evening rush hours.

Preliminary investigations have found that the passenger train failed to stop at a red signal, but the exact cause of the crash, including possible human or mechanical error, has still not been determined.

Ban to lower pollution levels

ROME — People in Rome, Milan and other Italian cities on Sunday got around on public transportation, bicycles, on foot and even on horseback as car traffic was banned for several hours to lower air-pollution levels.

In Rome and Milan, however, fans going to the stadiums to watch soccer games were to be exempted from the ban, provided they could show a ticket if required.

In Rome, the ban started at 10 a.m., with Romans and tourists alike taking advantage of a sunny day and lack of traffic for walks and bike or horseback rides. The restriction, originally scheduled to last eight hours, eventually was cut to five hours.

Smaller cities such as Brescia, Bergamo and Como also adopted similar bans.

Security raised at Saudi holy sites during pilgrimage

BY ADNAN MALIK
The Associated Press

MINA, Saudi Arabia — The Interior Ministry has mobilized more than 50,000 forces to prepare for the annual hajj, officials said Sunday, but they warned that terrorists may still be able to launch attacks.

The forces will safeguard Saudi's holiest Islamic sites for an estimated 2 million Muslims who are expected to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca, a once-in-a-lifetime duty of all able-bodied Muslims who can afford it to cleanse the soul and wipe away sin.

Meanwhile, pilgrims streaming into Islam's holy city for the hajj, prayed for the more than 157,000 people killed in last month's tsunami and earthquake that devastated south Asia, asking God to give survivors the courage to cope.

The tragedy weighed heavily as the spiritual journey geared up.

Indonesia — the world's most populous Muslim nation with 220 million people — was hit hardest by the natural disaster, but 200,000 Indonesians, the country's quota, still were expected in Mecca.

"I have lost a friend in the tsunami, and I pray for him and the souls of all those that have perished," said Mohamed Saleh, a 50-year-old teacher from Jakarta. "I pray that God will meet broken hearts and give them courage to overcome the grief."

Saleh spoke Friday as he stood outside the city's Grand Mosque and prayed.

Inside the mosque, pilgrims circled the kaaba, a cubic stone structure toward which Muslims turn for prayers five times a day. Pilgrims circle the kaaba to start and finish hajj rituals, which can be stretched over days but peak Wednesday with prayers on Mount Arafat, where Islam's founding Prophet Muhammad delivered his final sermon.

Security was high throughout Mecca, where Saudi officials try to prevent stampedes or other accidents as well as watch for possible terror attacks. At checkpoints several miles outside the holy city, officers stopped cars randomly, peering into trunks, looking for explosives and checking IDs.

Interior Ministry spokesman Brig. Gen. Mansour Al-Turki said the kingdom, which has been on high alert since a series of attacks targeted Saudi security forces and foreign interests, was ready for the hajj and predicted it would go smoothly.

Al-Turki said most of the forces will be deployed to "high-density areas," referring to a site in Mina, about six miles from Mecca, where pilgrims pelted rocks at a stone column depicting the devil. The site has witnessed several stampedes in previous years resulting in the deaths of hundreds.

Japan marks quake anniversary

More than 6,400 died when tremor hit city of Kobe in 1995

BY JOSEPH COLEMAN
The Associated Press

KOBE, Japan — Cars and trucks speed over the once-topped elevated highways, and the thousands of collapsed houses have long been rebuilt. The ravaged port now features convention centers and Ferris wheels. Downtown gleams with new buildings.

The Japanese city of Kobe on Monday marks the 10th anniversary of the 7.3-magnitude earthquake that ripped through its heart Jan. 17, 1995, killing 6,433 people.

While the city has been nearly completely rebuilt, emotional and economic scars remain. Polls show nearly half of Kobe residents feel their lives have not fully recovered from the quake, and the memorials sprinkled around Kobe testify to the looming importance of the disaster in the city's psyche.

The remembrance of the quake and its victims has been magnified by the tsunami disaster in the Indian Ocean. While the scope and human toll of the tsunami greatly outweighs what happened in Kobe, residents here say the recent tragedy has brought a flood of memories of their own pain.

Kobe will be in the spotlight again on Tuesday, when it hosts a U.N. conference on disaster reduction, a long-planned event that has been retooled in the wake of the Asian disaster to focus on the creation of a tsunami-warning system in southern Asia. The conference runs until Saturday.

A woman holds a candle Sunday in Itami, Japan, before offering a prayer for the more than 6,400 victims of the 1995 earthquake in the nearby port city of Kobe as Japanese mark the 10-year anniversary of the deadly quake.

Demonstrating the national impact of the Kobe quake, Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko headed to the port city on Sunday to join in a series of commemorations. Government officials and thousands of others were also expected to attend ceremonies.

Ahead of the main events, high school students made 450 snow figures at a downtown park to symbolize victims on Sunday. People came through the afternoon and evening to put candles before snow figures; many bowed in prayer, some wiping tears from their eyes.

Monday was to start with a candle-light vigil at the time the quake hit, 5:46 a.m.

Titan probe records sounds from Saturn moon

BY MELISSA EDDY
The Associated Press

DARMSTADT, Germany — Pictures snapped by the Titan probe and a low, whooshing sound picked up by an on-board microphone drew gasps and applause from scientists Saturday, as the mission to Saturn's moon continued its breathtaking revelations from more than 900 million miles across the solar system.

Data beamed back from Titan, one of Saturn's moons, sketched a picture of a pale orange landscape with a spongy surface topped by a thin crust.

"The closest analogues are wet sand or clay," said John Zarnecki, in charge of instruments analyzing Titan's surface.

Scientists at the European Space Agency were clearly excited about the success of the mission, which had confirmed some long-held theories and produced startling surprises. "I have to say I was blown away by what I saw," lead scientist David Southwood said at the agency's headquarters in Darmstadt.

"It was an extraordinary experience to look at some of the stuff."

A boom mike extended from the 705-pound Huygens probe has captured a loud, rushing sound. Mission scientists did not immediately say what it might mean, but instruments on the probe have detected winds of about 15 mph.

Titan is the first moon other than Earth's to be explored.

Scientists believe its atmosphere may be similar to that of the primordial Earth and studying it could provide clues to how life began on our planet.

Huygens was spun off from the Cassini mother ship on Dec. 24 before it began its 2½-hour parachute descent on Friday, taking pictures and sampling the atmosphere before landing on Titan, where temperatures are estimated at 292 degrees below zero.

Gunbattle in Kuwait

UMM AL-HAIAMAN, Kuwait — Police and militants fought a gunbattle in a small Kuwaiti town near a U.S. military logistics center Saturday, leaving one Saudi gunman dead and two policemen wounded, the Interior Ministry said.

The shootout began Saturday afternoon in Umm al-Haiaman, a sparsely populated residential area on Kuwait City's outskirts. A U.S. military logistics center is in the neighboring town of Arifan, but the base was not believed to have been the target of the gunmen described by Kuwaiti officials as "terrorists."

China, Taiwan deal

MACAU — China and Taiwan have struck a deal allowing the first direct flights between the rivals in five decades — a major breakthrough that could help reduce tensions in one of Asia's most dangerous potential flash points.

The agreement Saturday allows a total of 48 round-trip charter flights to carry Taiwanese workers in China home and back during the Lunar New Year holiday next month, Chinese negotiator Pu Zhaozhou told reporters.

Man found guilty of manslaughter in '61 death

BY ADAM NOSSITER
The Associated Press

LAKE CHARLES, La. — An award-winning black journalist convicted of murder three times by all-white juries in the 1961 death of a bank teller was set free after a racially mixed jury found him guilty of manslaughter.

Wilbert Rideau, a confessed killer who gained fame for exposés of harsh Louisiana prison life, won his release Saturday after nearly 44 years in state prisons. A manslaughter conviction allows his release for time served.

Seven whites and five blacks deliberated for nearly six hours before reaching an unanimous decision.

Rideau, 62, showed little emotion as the verdict was announced late Saturday night. He left the Calcasieu Correctional Center with his lawyers, making only a few passing comments to reporters.

"I'm still trying to assess it," Rideau said. "It's unreal. It's all so new."

A small but jubilant crowd of supporters cheered Saturday's decision, shouting, "All right, Wilbert!" and "Thank you, Lord!"

On Sunday, Rideau left Lake Charles for Baton Rouge. His supporters were worried for his safety because of the depth of feeling against him in parts of Lake Charles, said Linda LaBranche, a legal researcher who worked with the Rideau Project at Loyola University in New Orleans and now runs Rideau's Web site.

The case has haunted this lake-side city near the Texas line for decades. Rideau's advocates have contended that his years in prison have rehabilitated him.

Rideau was 19 at the time of Julia Ferguson's death. He never denied killing his victim, who was white. His lawyers contended he panicked after a botched bank robbery and stabbed her impulsively amid Louisiana's 1960s-era climate of racial hostility.

Rideau, who escaped death row in the 1970s when the U.S. Supreme Court outlawed then-existing death penalty laws, has had three previous convictions for Ferguson's death. The convictions were overturned on appeal.

Two governors turned him down for pardons, under strong pressure from citizens here, despite repeated board recommendations that he be released. In 2000, a federal appeals court said his original 1961 indictment was flawed because blacks were excluded from the grand jury.

In his fourth trial, Rideau's defense sought a manslaughter verdict. Prosecutors wanted the jury to find him guilty of murder to ensure Rideau would end his days in jail, barring a pardon.

Shortly before the jury was handed the case, Rideau's attorney Julian Murray suggested that racism had distorted the crime, keeping local passions inflamed.

"You have to understand that time, and then it comes together," Murray said. "You think they would hesitate to exaggerate the facts of the case, to get the result they wanted?"

Ferguson's stabbing on a lonely rural road on Feb. 16, 1961, was "a terrible act, a criminal act, one for which he deserves great punishment, but not one for which he deserves to be locked up for the rest of his life," Murray said. "He did a terrible thing, but it wasn't murder."

Bush says election win ratifies his Iraq policy

BY JIM VANDEHEI
AND MICHAEL A. FLETCHER
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Bush the public's decision to re-elect him was a ratification of his approach toward Iraq and that there was no reason to hold any administration officials accountable for mistakes or misjudgments in prewar planning or managing the violent aftermath.

"We had an accountability moment, and that's called the 2004 elections," Bush said in an interview with The Washington Post. "The American people listened to different assessments made about what was taking place in Iraq, and they looked at the two candidates and chose me."

With the Iraq elections two weeks away and no signs of the deadly insurgency abating, Bush set no timetable for withdrawing U.S. troops and twice declined to endorse Secretary of State Colin Powell's recent statement that the number of Americans serving in Iraq could be reduced by year's end. Bush said he will not ask Congress to expand the size of the National Guard or regular Army, as some lawmakers and military experts propose.

In a wide-ranging, 35-minute interview aboard Air Force One on Friday, Bush also laid out new details of his second-term plans for both foreign and domestic policy. For the first time, Bush said he will not press senators to pass a Constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, the top priority for many social conservative groups. And he said he has no plans to cut benefits for the roughly 40 percent of Social Security recipients who collect monthly disability and survivors payments as he prepares his plan for partial privatization.

With his inauguration just days away, Bush defended the administration's decision to force the District of Columbia to spend $12 million of its homeland security budget to provide tighter security for this week's festivities. He also warned that the ceremony could make the city "an attractive target for terrorists."

But it will be Iraq that dominates White House deliberations off stage. Over the next few weeks, Bush will be monitoring closely Iraq's plan to hold elections for a 275-member national assembly. He must deliver his State of the Union address with a message of resolve on Iraq, and he will need to seek congressional approval for roughly $100 billion in emergency spending, much of it for the war.

In the interview, the president urged Americans to show patience in coming months as Iraq moves slowly toward creating a democratic nation where a brutal dictatorship once stood. But the relentless optimism that dominated Bush's speeches before the U.S. election was sometimes replaced by pragmatism and caution.

"On a complicated matter such as removing a dictator from power and trying to help achieve democracy, sometimes the unexpected will happen, both good and bad," he said. "I am realistic about how quickly a society that has been dominated by a tyrant can become a democracy. ... I am more patient than some."

Powell last week said U.S. troops levels could be reduced this year, but Bush said it is premature to judge the number of U.S. men and women who will be needed to defeat the insurgency and plant a new and sustainable government. He also declined to pledge to significantly reduce U.S. troop levels before the end of his second term in January 2009.

"The sooner the Iraqis are ... better prepared, better equipped to fight, the sooner our troops can start coming home," he said. Bush did rule out asking Congress to increase the size of the National Guard and regular Army, as many lawmakers, including the president's 2004 opponent Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., are calling for. "What we're going to do is make sure that the missions of the National Guard and the Reserves closely dovetail with active Army units, so that the pressure ... is eased."

A new report released last week by U.S. intelligence agencies warned that the war in Iraq has created a new training ground for terrorists. Bush called the report "somewhat speculative" but acknowledged "this could happen. And I agree. If we are not diligent and firm, there will be parts of the world that become pockets for terrorists to find safe haven and to train. And we have a duty to disrupt that."

Long march to justice in Philadelphia, Miss.

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. — "A reputed Ku Klux Klansman was arrested late Thursday on murder charges in the 1964 killing of three voter-registration volunteers ... a case that is one of the last pieces of unfinished business from the civil rights era."

—Associated Press, Jan. 6, 2005.

Every time I see Philadelphia, Miss., in the news, I think of the cottonmouth moccasin in an ice chest used by journalists covering civil-rights marches during some of the ugliest days of our nation's history. The moccasin, I soon discovered, was not nearly as poisonous or deadly as the local Klansmen who terrorized and murdered civil-rights workers, sometimes in collusion with local law-enforcement officials.

Local racists put the snake in the chest when reporters and photographers stopped for ice at a country store just outside Philadelphia, the seat of Neshoba County. After that, I decided it was better to drink a warm Coke than to open an ice chest. As a young intern reporter for Newsweek magazine, I found myself in Philadelphia almost two years after the 1964 murder of three civil-rights workers whose bodies were buried in an earthen dam. The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. led a ragged but brave column of marchers to Philadelphia's town square for a rally. As local whites, held back by state police, hurled racial epithets and rocks and bottles into the crowd of civil-rights activists, King raised his powerful voice and said he could sense the presence of the murderers of the three civil-rights workers in the square.

A voice rang out from behind the police lines. "We're right over here," someone shouted, as the white hecklers laughed and hooted.

I had not a doubt that the killers were in voice range. And I had no reason to believe that the murderers of James Chaney, a 21-year-old black Mississippian, and two white New Yorkers, Andrew Goodman, 20, and Michael Schwerner, 24, would ever be brought to justice for a hateful crime that outraged the nation.

In 1967, the U.S. Justice Department brought civil-rights prosecutions against 18 suspects, including reputed Klansman Edgar Ray Killen, Neshoba County Sheriff Lawrence Rainey and Deputy Cecil Price, after Mississippi officials showed little interest in seeking murder indictments in the case. Seven were convicted and sentenced to prison terms from three to 10 years. None served more than six years. Killen escaped conviction by an 11-to-1 jury deadlock. The holdout was a woman who said she could never convict a preacher of the Gospel, which Killen claimed to be.

In 1999, the Mississippi attorney general, after an investigation by the Clarion-Ledger newspaper in Jackson, broke new ground in the case. This month, Killen, now 79, was arrested and charged with the murder of Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner. Other arrests could follow, but justice can never be fully served as long as even one of the killers goes free.

For 41 years, the men who beat and shot the three civil-rights workers have gotten on with their small, twisted lives. They raised families and went to church. Some, no doubt, already have gone to their graves, and those still living have become old men.

You have to wonder what it must feel like to come to the end of life burdened by an evil secret that ultimately will be judged, if not in this world, in the next. ...

Not surprisingly, some Mississippians were quoted in news reports as saying they see no point in reopening the case after all these years, that nothing good can come from it. But as usual, John Lewis, the Georgia congressman and civil-rights hero, said it best: "It is never, ever too late to bring about justice and send the strongest possible message that bigotry and hate will not be tolerated in our society."

‘Pilot error’ explanation leaves full story in its wake

BY PETER GARRISON

Ever heard of Sten Molin? He was the pilot whose overaggressive use of the rudder pedals of an American Airlines Airbus brought the airplane down on Long Island land in 2001 with the loss of 265 lives.

His name was in all the papers. The National Transportation Safety Board said it was his fault.

Close reading of the NTSB report, released late last month, reveals, however, that Molin was merely a convenient fall guy. The real cause of the accident was a conspiracy of ignorance persistently tolerated by the Federal Aviation Administration, the airlines and the airplane manufacturers. The pilot was the last link in a chain of causes that made him as much the innocent victim as anyone else who died in that airplane.

Molin, whom colleagues described as a smooth, accurate and above-average pilot, was just doing what he had been trained to do, and under circumstances in which he and all other pilots believed that nothing they did could possibly hurt the airplane. That a few not-very-hard kicks on the Airbus' unusually sensitive rudder pedals could actually break the vertical fin off the plane, dooming it to certain loss of control, was a fact that only some aeronautical engineers, and a few oddly reticent bureaucrats at the FAA, understood.

Federal aviation regulations prescribe the strength of every part of an airplane. Some requirements are based on turbulence, others on maneuvers that the pilot can perform. Because the strains that maneuvers impose on an airplane increase as the plane's speed increases, engineers select a certain speed, called the maneuvering speed, as an upper boundary. Before the Airbus accident, nearly all pilots believed that as long as an airplane was flying at or below the maneuvering speed, nothing they could do would break it.

That belief was universal in part because it was so logical. After all, what would be the point of publishing a "maneuvering speed" if it were not a safe speed for maneuvering? Besides, the FAA explicitly supported it. The government's own Pilot's Handbook of Aeronautical Knowledge says "any combination of flight control usage (below the maneuvering speed), including full deflection of the controls ... should not create an excessive loss."

Airlines and manufacturers had developed training curricula designed to encourage pilots, who normally fly with a velvet touch to keep passengers comfortable, to use all the controls unthinkingly in certain emergencies. Sometime before the Airbus crash, when an instructor pilot asked Molin why he had used the rudder so vigorously during a simulated wake turbulence encounter, Molin had cited an American Airlines pilot-education program that specifically encouraged doing so.

Molin's Airbus was below the maneuvering speed when it broke apart. Its fin came off because he stepped on the rudder pedals alternately, in quick succession, in an attempt to steady the aircraft after it had been jolted by the wake of another airliner. Strangely, federal regulations require the vertical fin to be strong enough to withstand full deflection of the rudder — the movable rear portion of the surface — only when the airplane is flying straight ahead, but not when it's "yawed" — that is, pointed a few degrees to one side or the other. The effect of alternating rudder inputs is just that — to yaw the airplane. Yet no pilot's handbook, no simulator curriculum and no FAA publication mentioned the possible dire consequences before the Airbus crash.

Neither the regulations nor the airplanes have changed, nor will they, but there's been a good deal of verbal backing and filling in the three years since the accident. Handbooks and curricula have been revised, articles have been written and bulletins have been circulated to pilots pointing out the limited protection provided by the maneuvering speed. Too late for Sten Molin, though, and for his fellow victims of a pervasive and dangerous misunderstanding.

Peter Garrison writes a monthly accident analysis column for Flying magazine. This column first appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

King's widow reflects on husband's legacy

BY ERRIN HAINES

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Sitting in the same spot where her husband preached equality more than four decades ago, Coretta Scott King said Saturday that Martin Luther King Jr.'s message is as relevant today as it was in the 1960s.

"It's as if he were writing for this period," King said in a rare public appearance on what would have been her husband's 76th birthday. "Nonviolence would work today, it would work 2,000 years from now, it would work 5,000 years from now."

"If Martin's philosophy had been lived out in Iraq, we wouldn't have bin Laden," she said.

King reminisced about her life with — and without — the slain civil rights leader in an appearance at Ebenezer Baptist Church.

Hundreds of people filled the pews and stood in the aisles to hear her speak in the same church where Martin Luther King Jr. was preacher from 1960 until his death in 1968 at age 39.

"I have many, many memories of being in this sanctuary," King said in a presentation in the form of an interview with PBS talk show host Tavis Smiley.

King's appearance was part of the 12th annual Hands on Atlanta Martin Luther King Jr. Service Summit. The event continues through Monday.

Dressed in a red suit and wearing her signature coif, King said her husband's "moral voice" is missing from American society but she is committed to spreading his teachings — a task she said she embraced during her marriage.

"As we were thrust into the cause, it was my cause, too," she said. "I married the man and the cause. I realized I, too, could be killed."

King said she helped her husband through times of disappointment when he grew weary of his fight for equality, adding that he was frequently depressed when people would riot.

"I would tell him, 'You're the only one who's making any sense right now,'" she said. "I tried to think of positive, uplifting and true things to say."

After King's death, the King Center, a memorial and resource center honoring him, became Coretta Scott King's legacy and vision, along with raising her children.

"When he died, I knew I didn't have his abilities and skills, but I have my own," she said.

Marni Rogers, 34, said attending the event was an inspirational and educational experience.

"To see her in Ebenezer being interviewed was a historical moment, very moving," she said.

King's son seeks to share father's work with the world

BY LOUISE CHU

The Associated Press

ATLANTA — Martin Luther King III has devoted most of his life to carrying on his father's work, and he took another step when he signed on to lead an organization founded to keep the civil rights leader's legacy alive.

One year after leaving the Southern Christian Leadership Conference amid internal conflicts and doubts about its future, King says he feels "at home" leading the King Center for Nonviolent Social Change, and is working on bringing his late father's message to a world audience.

"To take over as the president was a great honor and gave me a great opportunity to look at the work from a global standpoint," King told The Associated Press in an interview Friday. "SCLC was more regional and national; the center's work is global."

The King Center was founded in 1968 to carry on the legacy of the slain civil rights leader, who led the charge toward equality for blacks during the 1950s and '60s using principles of nonviolence. Last year, Martin Luther King III's younger brother, Dexter Scott King, resigned as president and chief executive of the organization to pursue media and entertainment opportunities in California.

Meanwhile, the eldest King child took his position as president of the SCLC, the activist organization his father co-founded and led before his death. The group, once at the forefront of the movement, was plagued with infighting, and its board often clashed with King. He was suspended from the SCLC presidency for seven days in 2001 after the board complained that he was ineffective and mostly absent.

Martin Luther King III

King attributed many of the problems to "generational issues" between older members who disagreed with younger members' attempts to redefine the group in a changing political landscape.

Infighting only intensified in the past year, as the SCLC went through several leadership changes before it chose its current president, former Alabama state Sen. Charles Steele Jr., in November.

"The SCLC is going to be fine, but it's going to take some time to rebuild," King said. "Organizations every now and then must have a leadership change as well as board changes, and I think the organization is trying to do that right now — address its own internal issues."

King looks forward to working with the SCLC again one day, adding that "it's still very much needed as an activist organization."

Since taking over as head of the King Center in January 2004,

King said he's been working to broaden the reach of his father's teachings, such as reviving educational seminars on nonviolence around the world and developing an online learning database.

"I would like to see more and more people embrace the message of Martin Luther King Jr.," he said. "It's easier with technology than it was in the past because you don't have to go everywhere now."

One of the center's biggest victories was the establishment in 1986 of the King national holiday, which is celebrated on the third Monday of January. The center since has led the nation's commemoration of the holiday, to be celebrated January 17 this year, by promoting it as a day of reflection and volunteerism.

Over the past decade, the center worked to build up its infrastructure and modernize its technology under Dexter King, and is ready to start presenting initiatives for the public, King said.

The center hopes to unveil the new programs by the end of the year.

"If we could train a million people in Kingian nonviolence, then that, to me, would be an effective and successful theme that I'm here," he said.

Wealth gap a vital issue for civil rights

BY DEEPTI HAJELA

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Shawn Baldwin, who had recently started his own brokerage and asset management firm, was in a tough spot. He needed clients to build a track record as an underwriter but, like many young black professionals in the financial sector, experience and education wasn't enough. He needed contacts and access to top decision-makers.

Baldwin, 38, got his break in 2002 through the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who introduced him to executives at Citibank. He soon got his first underwriting contract and leveraged it into two others.

He projects his Chicago-based company will do 40 deals in the first half of 2005 alone.

For many minorities, access to capital remains elusive. Forty years after the passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, decades after the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. brought economic disparity to wide attention, economic equality is the paramount civil rights issue, advocates say.

Fewer blacks than whites own their houses, get fair loans, invest in the stock market, sit on corporate boards or have any real control over much of the trillions of dollars flowing in mutual funds, pension plans and the markets.

"Very real gains have been made in some parts of the economic front and the education front and most particularly on the job front," said Thomas Shapiro, professor at the Heller School for Social Policy and Management at Brandeis University. "(But) those gains are being reversed through widening racial wealth gaps."

Wealth is different from the money in your paycheck. It's your investments in stocks and mutual funds and pension plans and 401(k)s, the equity you've gained from paying the mortgage on your home, assets you can use to pay for education, fund your retirement, or leave an inheritance to help future generations.

And wealth has been very difficult for blacks as a group to accumulate. There are historical reasons — slavery, laws that kept them from education, housing and good jobs — as well as persistent discrimination in getting mortgages, business and other loans.

"The biggest problem is that we've been choked off to large degree from capital," Baldwin said.

In 1999, during a boom economy, Shapiro said, black middle-class families on average had one-fourth of the wealth of similarly educated, similarly employed white middle-class families. The disparity was even starker across all income groups — black families as a whole had only 10 cents in wealth for every dollar white families had, according to government figures.

Blacks lag in stock market investments, as well. In 1998, 57 percent of blacks making at least $50,000 invested, compared to 81 percent of whites, said Melody Hobson, president of Ariel Capital Management, a minority-owned firm in Chicago. During the stock market boom, the percentage of black investors shot up 74 percent in 2002 but had dropped to 64 percent by 2003. Meanwhile, white investment stayed roughly the same.

Warning signs mark the boundary of The Canyons ski resort outside Park City, Utah. Five people who went beyond the barriers are missing following Friday's avalanche.

Rescuers find body of one missing in Utah avalanche

The Associated Press

PARK CITY, Utah — Rescuers and trained dogs discovered a body Sunday of one of the five people feared buried by a massive avalanche.

Katie Eldridge, spokeswoman for The Canyons ski resort, near the avalanche, said a news conference was being scheduled to announce the details.

More than 150 rescue workers and trained dogs began scaling Utah's treacherous backcountry at sunrise Sunday to resume the search. The amount of snow forced down the mountain by Friday's slide — up to 30 feet deep at some points — forced authorities to count the potential victims by matching eyewitness accounts of the avalanche to a list of skiers thought to be in the area at the time.

One person was identified as having been consumed by the avalanche: Shane Maixner, 28, of Sandpoint, Idaho, whose friend told a 911 dispatcher that he saw Maixner buried by the slide, Summit County Sheriff Dave Edmunds said.

Rescue workers spent all day

Saturday digging through the massive snow pile but found no traces of any of the missing. If Sunday's second sweep of the debris field failed to find anything, authorities planned to bring in machines to take away layers of snow, Edmunds said.

"It's been quite awhile now but if anybody can survive Shane can," Maixner's stepmother, Linda Maixner, said Sunday from her home in Bismarck, N.D.

Those feared buried were in an out-of-bounds area near The Canyons resort that had been marked with skull and crossbones warning signs.

3 missing after crab boat sinks

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — A Crab boat with six crew members sank in the Bering Sea, killing at least one, and the Coast Guard was searching for three aboard who were still missing.

The Coast Guard and Alaska State Troopers said three crewmen were recovered: One survived, one died and the condition of the third man, who remained aboard a trooper vessel, was not immediately known, said Coast Guard spokeswoman Gail Sinner.

The Coast Guard received an "emergency position-indicating radio beacon" Saturday morning from the Big Valley, a crab boat out of Kodiak.

A Coast Guard helicopter picked up two crewmen: one from the water and one from a life raft. The man in the water died but the man in the raft was "doing well" at a St. Paul Island hospital, Sinner said. A third man was pulled from the water by the trooper vessel.

Biological mom takes custody of boy in latest chapter of Fla. dispute

By Ron Word

The Associated Press

ATLANTIC BEACH, Fla. — The woman who raised a 3½-year-old boy at the center of a custody dispute tearfully handed the boy to his biological mother on Saturday, then dropped to the ground and repeatedly screamed: "How can they do this to a little boy?"

Even, bundled in a blue jacket and sucking on a pacifier, was carried outside by Dawn Scott, who along with her husband, Gene, cared for the child for most of his life. The couple had appealed the judge's ruling transferring custody to the biological mother, Amanda Hopkins.

News crews gathered around the Scotts' home Saturday morning in anticipation of the meeting, and the child's biological father and grandfather pushed a TV cameraman out of the way during the transfer.

Even, who could be heard wailing inside the home, appeared calm after he was placed in a car seat in a van driven by Hopkins' husband, Michael. Amanda Hopkins scolded photographers taking pictures of the child: "Leave him alone. He's just a little boy."

Gene Scott called it a "very emotional, traumatic situation" and said the family would continue their legal fight.

The Scotts had appealed Friday to the 1st District Court of Appeal in Tallahassee, asking the court to let them keep the child. But their attorney, Susan Pniwski, said the court never acted.

The case began about 3½ years ago when the childless Scotts met Hopkins, who was pregnant. She agreed to a private adoption, according to court files.

The Scotts watched Evan's birth in May 2001, and he was placed with them two days later.

The adoption was supposed to be final in August 2001. But a month before that, the boy's biological father, Stephen White, filed a motion demanding custody. The Scotts claimed White should not be able to block the adoption, but a judge disagreed.

Hopkins — who lives in Illinois with her infant daughter and husband Michael, a member of the U.S. Navy — supported the adoption until it appeared the court might grant White's request for custody. Late last month, she was awarded custody and White was given liberal visitation rights.

Dawn Scott carries Evan to a waiting van, as his biological mother, Amanda Hopkins, right, looks on Saturday in Atlantic Beach, Fla. Scott, who raised the 3½-year-old boy at the center of a custody dispute, tearfully handed the boy to his biological mother on Saturday.

La. governor to pardon civil rights activist in honor of King

The Associated Press

BATON ROUGE, La. — A woman arrested while trying to integrate a public swimming pool in 1963 will be the first person pardoned by Gov. Kathleen Blanco.

Blanco said she will grant the pardon for Betty Claiborne, 62, on Monday as part of ceremonies honoring the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.

"I thought that it would speak to the way Louisiana has changed, and it also speaks to certain injustices of the past," Blanco said Friday.

Claiborne, then a 20-year-old college student, was arrested with four others on July 23, 1963, at the City Park pool, a social hub for the white community.

Claiborne, who is black, was charged with simple battery, disturbing the peace and resisting arrest and taken to jail.

"We knew we weren't supposed to be there," she said. "We went prepared to go to jail, which is why I never understood why they charged us with resisting arrest."

Claiborne was convicted of simple battery, a misdemeanor. Claiborne, a chaplain at East Baton Rouge Parish Prison, told The Advocate of Baton Rouge that she wanted to remove the conviction from her record because it was preventing her from receiving a degree in theology.

Dogfight trial

PA PITTSBURGH — A man who mailed pit bull fight videotapes to government investigators is the first person to stand trial under a 1999 federal animal cruelty statute signed by President Clinton.

The lawyer for Robert Stevens, 61, of Pittsview, Va., doesn't dispute that Stevens sold the tapes, some of which he narrated. Instead, federal public defender Michael Novaro said during Stevens' trial that his client shouldn't be targeted because the intent of the law was to prevent "wanton cruelty to animals designed to appeal to a prurient interest in sex." Clinton signed the law after complaints about videos in which small animals were pictured being crushed under the feet of women wearing spiked heels.

Gas explosion at mall

IL CHICAGO — A natural gas explosion overturned cars and blasted a hole in a parking lot at a shopping mall on the city's southwest side, authorities said. Ten people were hurt.

The cause of the explosion at the Ford City Mall was unknown, authorities said. Utility crews were on the scene to shut down gas service to the area. Ambulances and other emergency crews also responded.

Three of the injured were taken to the hospital in serious condition, while the others were in fair or good condition, Chicago Fire Department spokeswoman Rosa Escareno said.

Halfway house shooting

MD BALTIMORE — At least one gunman entered a halfway house, shot to death three residents and seriously wounded a fourth man, who escaped by apparently jumping out a window, police said.

Investigators believe one of the victims might have been killed over a debt. The others may have been shot because they were witnesses, police said.

The three men who died in the shootings lived at the home, which serves people recovering from drug or alcohol addiction. Each was shot at least once and was found in a seated position.

The fourth man had a gunshot wound to his back and other injuries. Their identities were not released. Police were still searching for suspects.

Rebel flags over graves

NC CHARLOTTE — A Confederate battle flag flying over the graves of Civil War soldiers in a city-owned cemetery should be placed in a glass case and flown only on designated days, according to draft recommendations from a city committee.

The group also suggested replacing the battle flag at Elmwood Cemetery with another Confederate flag, such as the N.C. State Flag of 1861.

The Charlotte City Council still must approve the recommendations, but flag supporters oppose what they've heard so far.

"If this is their recommendation, we will fight it," said Mark Alexander Palmer, who has relatives buried at Elmwood. "This flag represents what these men fought and died under. It represents their beliefs. They have the right to have it flow over their headstones."

AMERICAN ROUNDUP

Drill sergeant sentenced

OK FORT STILL — A drill sergeant was convicted of taking bribes from trainees under his command in which soldiers could buy "insurance" to guarantee they would pass basic training.

Sgt. 1st Class Larry T. Jones, 35, was given a five-year prison sentence following his conviction on nine charges and 18 specifications that included bribery, assault, conspiracy and making false statements to investigators.

voted 10-to-1 against the district's final offer, with one abstention. If union members agree with the board, they will go on strike — despite a state law forbidding a walkout.

Union and district negotiators have been meeting with a federal mediator to try to avert what would be the fourth strike in the state's largest school district since 1973.

Russian mob heist?

NY NEW YORK — A gang of armed robbers from the former Soviet Union took in more than $1 million from heists including the robbery of a Manhattan jewelry store, according to court documents.

The gang is accused of storming into the store in July, brandishing guns, smashing glass and taking about $1 million in jewelry, according to an FBI complaint.

FBI agents said they matched DNA from blood left at the scene to a profile of Gidon Abramov, whom they called a ranking Russian Mafia member and leader of the robbers. His car was ticketed near the jewelry store on the day of the robbery, the complaint said.

Abramov was arrested last month. His attorney did not immediately return a phone call seeking comment.

Fewer turkeys raised

WV MORGANTOWN — West Virginia farmers raised 1.1 million fewer turkeys for the dinner table in 2004 than the year before, but the launch of a new interstate cooperative in Hinton, Va., should help stem the decline.

West Virginia growers raised 3.2 million turkeys last year, down 26 percent from 4.3 million in 2003, according to the state Department of Agriculture. The drop was in marked contrast to nationwide production, which was down only 4 percent, from 274 million birds in 2003 to about 264 million last year.

But agriculture spokesman Buddy Davidson said the decline in West Virginia is not a long-term trend, and growers could see gains this year.

Police officer convicted

MI DETROIT — A federal jury convicted a police officer of stealing illegal drugs and distributing them to people who agreed to be shown using them on his commercial Web site, the U.S. Attorney's office said.

The jury convicted Ceire Campbell, 31, of distributing crack cocaine and heroin and conspiracy to distribute them. Both charges carry maximum sentences of 20 years in prison.

Prosecutors said Campbell stole the drugs from Detroit police raids that occurred between June 2002 and May 2003, when a relative of Campbell's notified police.

Agents raided Campbell's home and found drugs and paraphernalia, a stolen handgun and waivers the drug users signed to permit footage of them to be used on the Internet.

Campbell has been suspended without pay since his arrest. Police spokesman James Tate said Campbell will be removed from the force based on his conviction.

Child molester freed

TX DALLAS — A former YMCA camp counselor convicted of molesting 40 children and later castrated voluntarily was set to be freed from jail after a judge threw out the newest indictments against him.

District Judge John Nelms ruled that a prosecutor's delay in moving the charges through the courts harmed the chances of a fair trial for David Wayne Jones, who pleaded guilty in 1991 in exchange for 15 years in prison.

The newest charges involved abuse that allegedly occurred in the early 1990s. Prosecutors brought the charges after the judge dismissed a similar charge, also because prosecutors waited too long to pursue it.

Prosecutors said they will appeal.

Electric cow power

VT MONTPELIER — The 1,500 cows at Blue Spruce Farm in Bridport are producing more than just milk. They're generating electricity.

The methane gas from their manure is being used to produce electricity for Vermont's largest utility.

The manure is heated up and then produces methane gas as it breaks down. The gas is collected and used to power a generator, which sends electricity onto the power grid.

So far about 1,000 customers have signed on to pay about 4 cents more per kilowatt-hour for their electricity to support the farmers. Residential households pay about 12 cents per kilowatt-hour normally.

Fatal car wreck

VA RICHMOND — A car traveling at a high rate of speed hit a tree and broke into two pieces in Chesterfield County, killing all three people inside, police said.

"The force of the impact was phenomenal," Chesterfield Police Capt. Karl Leonard said, adding that the car hit a tree in the median, throwing all three people from the vehicle.

The victims, all from suburban Richmond, were identified by police as Brandon L. Fugett, 22; Paul D. Hines, 23; and Brett K. Jones Jr., 23.

Woman hit by car

NE LINCOLN — A driver clipped a pregnant woman and crashed into a Salvation Army Family Store and Donation Center after her foot slipped off the brake of her car, police say.

The 69-year-old woman's vehicle rammed through the concrete and glass, hitting Carrie Harris, 26, who is 5 months pregnant. Harris was treated for cuts on her elbow and a leg injury.

Student withdraws suit

MO JOPLIN — A student barred from wearing a gay pride-themed T-shirt at his southwest Missouri high school withdrew his federal lawsuit against the Webb City school district.

The controversy involving Brad Mathewson's choice of clothing — including a shirt that said "I'm gay and I'm proud" — deflated with his withdrawal from Webb City High School last month.

"The issue was moot," said Terry Sexton, an attorney for Mathewson.

Mathewson had several confrontations with school officials in the fall. He was suspended Oct. 27 but returned to school Nov. 2 after promising not to wear gay-themed T-shirts until the issue could be resolved.

The school district has said it prohibited the T-shirts because they were disruptive and therefore a violation of school dress code.

School cell phone ban

WA WRENTHAM — Along with chewing gum and notes in class, cell phones have been banned in Wrentham's two elementary schools, adding the town to a growing number of school systems that have cracked down on cell phone use.

Phones in class mainly has been a problem in high schools around the state, which typically ban them in class, but let students carry them in. Wrentham teachers heard cell phones ringing in fifth- and sixth-grade classrooms for the first time before winter break, prompting the ban.

Naked jogger zapped

AR WEST MEMPHIS — For months, officers have been getting reports about a man making late-night runs in the buff. Police said they think they got their mystery jogger.

Fate Patterson, 39, of West Memphis was arrested after he ran past a police car and failed to stop when he was ordered to do so by officers. Police chased him and were able to rein him in by using a Taser.

Patterson was charged with indecent exposure, fleeing and resisting arrest.

Mike Allen, assistant chief of the West Memphis police department, said that it did not initially appear that the man was mentally ill. He did not disclose his reasons for running without his clothes.

What a catch!

AL FLORENCE — Gary Gallien is a house painter. But earlier this week he became a dog catcher — literally.

Working with a crew at an apartment complex in Florence, Gallien caught a small dog as it fell from a fifth-floor balcony.

Gallien said he had stepped outside the building when he heard a woman scream and saw a white, furry object falling toward him.

"Somebody hollered and I looked up and just stuck out my arms and caught it," he said. "I caught it like a football. I was fixing to run for a touchdown with it."

Gallien said he did not know where the dog came from, but he took it back to the fifth floor and turned it loose in the hall.

Suicide rates addressed

AK FAIRBANKS — Auditors are recommending that the Statewide Suicide Prevention Council created in 2001 to address Alaska's high suicide rate should continue its work through 2009 instead of ending its work in June. Alaska's suicide rate consistently ranks as one of the highest in the United States. In 2004, there were more than 150 documented suicides in the state, the highest ever.

Love regains custody of daughter

Singer Courtney Love has regained full custody of her 11-year-old daughter, her attorney said.

Love, 40, lost custody of Frances Bean Cobain, her daughter with late Nirvana singer Kurt Cobain, in 2003 after she oversaw on painkillers in front of the girl. The overdose occurred after Love allegedly broke into the home of her ex-boyfriend, music producer Jim Barber.

Her daughter had been staying with Love's stepfather and sister, but Love had daily contact with the girl.

Love regained custody Monday through a judge's ruling, said Love's attorney, Howard Weitzman.

Love, former lead singer of the group Hole, in a statement released by her attorney said: "Life is about choices, and I've chosen to move forward with my life in a healthy and positive way."

Opinions split on Moore in hometown

Oscar on the shelf or not, Michael Moore is not getting much respect at his old high school in Dayton, Mich.

Despite his fame and many honors, the filmmaker has been rejected all four times that he has been nominated for Dayton High School's Hall of Fame.

"Would you want him as a role model? Would you want your son or daughter to be like him?" asked Don Hammond, a member of the Hall of Fame selection committee. "I haven't talked to anybody yet who's for him. The word to describe Michael Moore is embarrassing. He embarrasses everybody."

Ryan Eashoo disagrees. The 1997 Dayton High graduate has won $600 or 80 hours the last two weeks and $600 of his own money trying to get Moore elected.

"We've been blacklisted," Eashoo, 25, told the Detroit Free Press. "I'm a huge Michael Moore fan. He's a great producer, great filmmaker, always sticking up for minorities. He's kind of an underdog."

So far, Eashoo has 300 signed nominations of Moore. His goal is 2,000 by Feb. 1. The committee meets Feb. 11 to choose its inductees.

Clarkson honored in Big Easy

Patricia Clarkson, back in her native Louisiana to play a governor's adviser in a remake of the film "All the King's Men," was celebrated like royalty when the mayor designated a day in her honor.

New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, a former high school classmate of Clarkson, declared Jan. 13 Patricia Clarkson Day and held a written proclamation that referred to the actress as "the Queen of Hollywood South."

"It is truly a dream," Clarkson, 45, said Thursday. "I'm shooting an incredibly beautiful film in my beautiful hometown and it's quite overwhelming. Who would have thought, many, many, many years ago, as I was performing on the O. Perry Walker [High School] stage... that I would be here today — with a day?"

New Orleans has become a frequent film location in recent years since state lawmakers approved tax credits for the industry. Nagin has sought to build on that by promoting the city as "Hollywood South."

"All the King's Men" also stars Sean Penn.

Sitting down with 'Coach Cool'

Samuel L. Jackson takes to court in real-life flick

BY COLLEEN LONG
The Associated Press

His casual clothes fit the attitude: black running jacket, jeans, white sneakers and just a hint of bling in a diamond-tinged watch and a dog tag with his initials around his neck. His nearly impervious ego is surprising, but with nearly 80 films under his belt, he doesn't really need to care what people think of him. With Jackson's articulate nature, along with a graying mustache and glasses, he could pass for a teacher, maybe one who taught How to Be Hip 101.

The 56-year-old actor's latest film, "Coach Carter," is based on the real-life story of Ken Carter, a basketball coach in an inner-city school in Richmond, Calif. Carter benched his whole team because some varsity players weren't academically performing up to standards he set in a contract.

Jackson's no fool. He knows his movie isn't going to elicit any big change in how education is generally reviled and athletics revered in schools, but he's OK with it. He's happy as long as a few kids see the film and decide they want to study more, or figure out that an education is something invaluable.

What did you think of Carter when you heard about him?

Jackson: I thought it was a refreshing change from always hearing about winning at any cost. I liked that about what he was doing, putting the idea out there that education is worth something, that it's important. That it will get you somewhere. And when the movie idea came my way, I thought it was socially relevant.

Do you agree with his methods?

Jackson: Sure, in some ways. Somewhere along the way we lost the idea of a "student-athlete." They have become "athlete-students." But winning on the floor is a reward for doing well in the classroom...

What do you think about the idea that inner-city kids are set up to fail?

Jackson: That's true. It's the whole idea that if you show up, you pass on. It's also that they need to see there's an upside to being smart, not just being athletic and hip. I don't think teachers are living up to the standards they should be. They tend to service the kids who pay attention, they don't want to deal with the kids that don't get the grades or that have the problems or that act out. In the city schools, they're also looking out for themselves and their well-being.

I have some teacher friends that wouldn't be too happy to hear you say that.

Jackson: I have teacher friends too, and they are goal-oriented and good at motivating their students, and will work with the kids that need the extra help instead of ignoring them, but I think that's the minority.

Do you feel like you have to be a role model because of your fame?

Jackson: No, I think I need to be a responsible human being, and do things I believe in, and I help out people but I don't do that publicly. It's not my responsibility as an actor to tell you who to vote for, or what cause to believe in or who to give money to. It makes me crazy to hear people in my profession preach about that sort of thing.

Actor Samuel L. Jackson stars in the new film "Coach Carter."

22 whales beach themselves on N.C. coast

Rescue crew members, from left, Seaman Adam Radford, USCG; Ari Friedlander of National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration; and Freeman Jennifer Smith, USCG, monitor a live pilot whale on Saturday near Nagshead, N.C. More than 20 whales beached themselves and at least 17 of them died, officials said.

With at least 17 dead, volunteers, Coast Guard work to save living

The Associated Press

MANTEO, N.C. — At least 22 pilot whales beached themselves on the coast early Saturday, and at least 17 of them died, officials said.

The whales were stranded along a five-mile stretch of land near Oregon Inlet in the northern Outer Banks, said Laura Engleby, spokeswoman for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

"We suspect there are more than 30" stranded whales, she said.

"The sea conditions have been fluctuating, making it difficult to account for all of them."

It is not uncommon for pilot whales to beach themselves, but scientists do not know why. The pilot whale is a protected species but not endangered.

NOAA's National Marine Fisheries Service was coordinating a recovery effort that involved biologists, Coast Guard crews and the National Park Service.

If biologists determine any of the whales are likely to survive, the Coast Guard will help move them back out to sea, said Petty Officer Donnie Brzuska.

Brzuska said mass strandings of pilot whales are not unusual in Florida and New England, but the stranding on the North Carolina coast was unusual.

Adult pilot whales can reach 20 feet long and weigh up to three tons.

Plan to desegregate Baltimore housing meets familiar criticism

BY FOSTER KLUG
The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — A judge's ruling to desegregate public housing by moving its mostly black and poor residents to the suburbs — a plan similarly proposed and rejected a decade ago — seems to be generating the same old resistance, and, surprisingly, some cautious new support.

The ruling by Judge Marvin Garbis came Jan. 6 in a 10-year-old civil rights case in which the judge decided Baltimore "should not be viewed as an island reservation for use as a container" for the region's poor.

The case covers 14,000 families, but officials have said not all would move — nor would huge groups move into small neighborhoods.

Relative to the population of the region, we are talking about grains of sand on the beach," said plaintiffs' attorney Andrew Freeman.

But officials from nearby suburban counties did not mince words.

A Carroll County official derided the ruling as "social engineering." One in outlying Anne Arundel County called it "judicial activism at its most dubious."

But in suburban Howard County — where houses carry an average sales price near $400,000, among the most expensive in the region — there has been a cautious embrace of the plan.

"It's not fair that we have one area that will be responsible for providing the bulk of affordable housing," housing director Leonard Vaughan said.

Vaughan said many working-class families in the suburbs can't afford the expensive homes being built — and he welcomes any plan that might benefit poor people, wherever they live.

Shanna Smith, president of the National Fair Housing Alliance, said suburban whites are often afraid city transplants will bring increased crime, devalue property and force schools to divert resources to children who speak foreign languages.

"People take an initially negative view because, quite frankly, they think blacks are leaving Baltimore city and coming to their community," she said. "All of these stereotypes contribute to a hostile attitude in a community, and these hostile attitudes are passed to public officials, who often try to stop the plan."

Garbis' ruling capped a lawsuit brought by the American Civil Liberties Union against the Baltimore Housing Authority and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in 1995. The civil rights group argued government policies had created "black ghettos" in Baltimore.

The judge concluded the plaintiffs did not prove current discrimination by city officials, or a failure by city officials to right past wrongs.

But he did say HUD failed to do its duty to promote fair housing and failed to look for solutions beyond the city limits. Garbis said the city remains to be seen whether HUD's actions were intentionally discriminatory or a result of political pressure.

A conference call was planned for Tuesday to determine the next step.

West Virginia Gov. Bob Wise, right, warms up by kicking through a board on Saturday before earning a black belt in tae kwon do.

W.Va. governor chops his way to a black belt

BY JOHN RABY
The Associated Press

SOUTH CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Don't mess with Gov. Bob Wise — the outgoing West Virginia chief executive won his black belt in tae kwon do on Saturday.

Nearly two decades after his initial attempt and just three months after surgery on both knees, Wise performed a series of body moves, traded arm chops and leg jabs with a partner, and kicked and elbowed through pieces of wood at the Kang Tae Kwon Do Academy.

"I'm ecstatic, really," said Wise, 57.

Wise was one of 80 students — from gold belts to black belts, from 4-year-olds to senior citizens — who competed for higher ranks Saturday in front of an overflow crowd. He is believed to be the only sitting governor with a black belt, said Sok Ho Kang, the academy's grand master.

An extramarital affair led

Wise to not seek re-election; fellow Democrat Joe Mancini will be inaugurated as his successor on Monday.

Wise earned a gold belt early in his nine-term career as a congressman, which ended when he ran for governor. But he suffered a broken rib during a tournament and didn't take classes again until after he sent his son to Kang a few years ago. In October, the avid jogger underwent arthroscopic surgery on both knees to clean out torn cartilage.

Along with California's bodybuilding Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, active chief executives include Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, who is training for the Little Rock Marathon in March, losing more than 100 pounds along the way.

"Governors are very competitive by nature," said Pat Wiley, director of management consulting for the National Governors Association. "They're usually high energy, so this kind of athletic competition goes hand in hand."

'See Dick and Jane. See Dick and Jane sue': Yiddish version called violation of copyright

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — See Dick and Jane. See Dick and Jane get a lawyer.

Pearson Education, the publishing company that owns the copyright to the single-paragraphs of countless U.S. reading primers, is suing a division of Time Warner for co-opting the characters in a book called "Yiddish With Dick and Jane," according to The New York Times.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, claims the book violates Pearson's copyright. The book, which has sold more than 100,000 copies since it was published in September by Little, Brown & Company, is billed as a parody.

Not so, the lawsuit says. "Yiddish With Dick and Jane" is "not a parody, but is an unprotected imitation," the suit alleges.

Author Barbara Davilman, who co-wrote the book with Ellis Weiner, told the newspaper that she views the lawsuit as "a good old shakedown for money." The parody book takes Dick and Jane into adulthood, where they're faced with problems like adultery, ailing parents and sexual orientation.

Pearson declined to comment further on the lawsuit, according to the Times. Little, Brown — a part of the Time Warner Book Group — issued a statement defending its product.

The book was "entitled to the full protection of the First Amendment and related laws permitting of social commentary," the statement said.

Horoscope

The moon in Taurus spurs a need for luxurious indulgence. Whether it's caviar or Egyptian sheets with a crazy thread count, what was once optional now seems like a must-have. Quality is king, but appetites are stimulated to such a degree that we want quantity, too. Don't buy on credit — by the end of the week there's nothing to show for it.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (January 17)

The seriousness that has helped you focus your power through the years is being transmuted into a more playful energy. Loved ones have fun with the change and react with renewed affection. Turn wisdom and education into profits this spring. If you continue to be financially shrewd, a big purchase is yours in April. Love signs are Libra and Gemini.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

What you've been striving for will reach its culmination very soon — so don't stop now! If you're waiting for an answer from someone, go ahead and call. It's no time to be a wallflower. Love sparkles anew.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

You are focused on transformation. But choose your role model very carefully. Attractive but selfish people have little to teach you and will waste your time. Hold out for true-blue loyalists.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21)

You'll be teased and enticed into oddball situations, and thank goodness, you've got such persuasive people around you. At the end of the day, you'll look back and realize you wouldn't have missed it for the world.

CANCER (June 22-July 22)

The stars check in to be sure you're well rested after a past lesson. Family dynamics still affect how you think of yourself, but the story is different from what it used to be. Get it down on paper so you can examine it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

You come across intimidating people — and it takes a lot to intimidate you!

When you get that feeling that you want to run five miles and read books to make yourself smarter, you'll know this is someone worth getting to know.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

The opportunity to risk is featured. Business gets to the point where you simply must decide to be bold or withdraw completely. Anything done halfway will stunt your profit margin.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)

You feel you've got a secret super-hero identity quietly working behind the scenes, and yes, you save the day. Humble, you won't feels up to your amazing feats, either. Private victory is no less sweet.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21)

What someone said to you long ago still rings in your ears. Test it out now once and for all. If it's true, keep it. If not, toss it out like the garbage it is. Tonight, someone new sparkles in your eyes.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

Move over, there are new folks coming into your world. It's probably a co-worker or someone who just moved into town. It takes seeing someone truly green to realize how far you've come in your arena.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

You're ready to meet the challenge, especially if it's bigger than you are. Some call you crazy, but time will show that you're the sane one. Crazy is when you don't rise to the occasion while the minutes of your life tick away.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

It makes you feel warm and happy when others notice subtle improvements you've made to your appearance through diet and/or exercise. Each compliment fans the flames, inspiring you to reach your goal.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

Your creative project is taking shape. The prize is within your grasp. Just don't neglect your day job while you're dreaming big, or your finances get ugly. Advertising and self-promotion work magic on your bank account.

Alcohol and guns never mix well

Dear Abby: My fiancé's best friend, "Ted," accidentally shot himself in the head in front of another friend, "Matt."

Matt blames himself for the accident, even though Ted survived and is doing OK. Matt and Ted were drinking and looking at Ted's gun. The gun has a history of not ejecting the bullet when you want it to. Ted looked to see if the gun had any bullets in it, and it didn't, so Ted put the barrel to his head and pulled the trigger.

Matt feels that Ted blames him for what happened, although nobody blames him. It was just a stupid accident.

Are there any support groups out there that my fiancé and I can get Matt into?

Caring Friend in Montana
Dear Caring Friend: Among the rules of responsible gun ownership are never to point the barrel at anyone and never to presume that the gun is empty. Ted is lucky his stupidity didn't cost him his life. If there is any support group I'd recommend for Matt — and Ted, too, as soon as he's fully recovered — it would be AA. It appears both of them have a serious alcohol problem.

Dear Abby

Dear Abby: Please print this cautionary tale of infidelity. It involves out-of-town professional conferences.

In my case, my husband and I confessed that he'd had an "emotional affair" with a single, professional colleague that endured for 20 years. While it was never sexual, they wrote each other letters and love poems — boxes of them. (She addressed them to his business P.O. box.) They also exchanged gifts.

The usual warning signs of infidelity were absent. There were no unexplained absences, no telephone receipts, no money missing from our joint account, no lipstick on his collars.

The only clues were my husband's defensiveness. My husband is ashamed and remorseful now. We're finally seeing a therapist, who is helping us rebuild our marriage.

My advice is that if your mate is less than enthusiastic about having you accompany him or her on trips to professional gatherings, be suspicious.

— Sadder But Wiser
in the Midwest

Dear Sadder: As your letter shows, emotional affairs can be as devastating to a marriage as sexual ones. Although your spouse's affair occurred at business conferences, I receive many letters and e-mails regarding online affairs where the people don't always meet in person. The time and energy poured into these relationships are stolen from the spouse and family.

Don't risk further molestation

Dear Annie: Last night, my life was turned upside down. My 14-year-old daughter, "Cindy," woke me up and said her stepdad, "Chuck," had touched her. There was no actual sex involved, thank God. I confronted Chuck immediately. He said he knew it was inappropriate and stopped right away.

Chuck was molested during his childhood, as was I, so we know how wrong this is. Chuck and I put all the blame on him, which is where it belongs. Before this happened, I never thought I would allow any man to get away with something like this, but now I'm not so sure what to do.

The three of us have a wonderful life. However, Cindy recently has been paying a lot of attention to Chuck. She is home-schooled and doesn't see many other children her age. After Cindy told me what Chuck did, I said I would kick him out, but she asked me not to. She said she loves both of us and that she is fine. Annie, I know my daughter, and she really is fine. Chuck and I are the ones struggling to come to terms with this.

All of this behavior is odd to me. Is it possible that Cindy is really OK?

So do I kick Chuck out, like I said I would?

Or, do we find a way to work through this? — Wishing It Was Yesterday in California

Dear Wishing: It's understandable that you are searching for a way to make this less serious, so your life can continue as it was, but it's not that simple. Chuck's family history makes it more likely that he could do this again, and Cindy may feel obligated to submit to his advances in order not to break up her family.

We strongly urge you to get family counseling, so you understand the risks and can work out the best solution. It may be best to separate until you do. Also, find activities for Cindy in the afternoon so she can meet other teenagers and won't EVER be left alone with Chuck. Good luck.

Dear Annie: With the cold and flu season here, I was wondering about the appropriateness of nose blowing in public, especially in my office. There are a few people who feel comfortable blowing their nose while standing at my desk, and I feel quite disgusted by it.

Is there a rule of etiquette in reference to this situation?

— Tampa, Fla.
Dear Tampa: You bet, a sneeze cannot be helped, but deliberately blowing one's nose should be done as privately as possible. Tell these oblivious co-workers sweetly, "I hope you will understand if I ask you not to blow your nose near my desk. I'm absolutely phobic about getting sick."

Michelle Kwan celebrates after winning her ninth title at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships, tying Maribel Vinson for the all-time record.

Kwan makes history with ninth U.S. title

By NANCY ARMOUR

The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — Michelle Kwan tossed her head back and raised her arms in triumph, a smile as bright as her golden dress spread across her face.

She had fretted about being able to win even one title when she was barely a teen. Now 24, she has a remarkable nine, her place in history secure with a run at the U.S. Figure Skating Championships as impressive for its longevity as its dominance.

"It's incredible. Nine!" said Kwan, whose latest crown came Saturday night, tying Maribel Vinson for the all-time record. "I just remember trying to win my first one. To get my ninth... I have no answer for that because I never thought I'd get here."

Now it seems hard to imagine nationals without her at the top of the podium.

Kwan earned four more 6.0s, giving her 42 at nationals in the illustrious career that began more than a decade ago when she was too young to wear makeup. Now she's as dominant as ever, with no one in the United States close to challenging her.

Certainly not Sasha Cohen, who again failed to come through when it matters most. Cohen finished second after botching two jumps and was lucky to finish ahead of up-and-comer Kimmie Meissner, who made a bit of history herself with the first triple axel by a U.S. woman since Tonya Harding in 1991.

Meissner had been doing the axel in practice all week and landed a perfect one in warmups, drawing loud applause. When it came time to do the jump for real, she almost seemed to be in slow motion as she took off and then turned 3½ times in the air. A huge smile crossed her face as she lightly touched down, and the crowd roared, knowing they'd just seen something special.

Earlier, Johnny Weir won his second straight men's title. Olympic bronze medalist Tim Goebel was second.

Vinson won nine titles in the 1920s and 1930s, a mark that once seemed unattainable. Gretchen Merrill, Tonya Albright and Peggy Fleming — they all won multiple titles, but none came close to Vinson.

But it's somehow fitting that Kwan was the one to finally reach the pinnacle. Her former coach, Frank Carroll, trained with Vinson, and Carroll would often tell Kwan stories about Vinson and the lessons she'd taught him.

"There's a cosmic connection between me and Maribel," Kwan said. "She taught Frank and Frank taught me. To be with her is something."

Her performance Saturday night may not have been Kwan's best — she was a little tentative and slower than she's been in practice, and she only did five triples. But it was more than worthy of the record books.

Skating to "Bolero," with a program choreographed by none other than Christopher Dean, Kwan was the picture of grace, perfectly in sync with the music.

She picked up speed with every jump she did, until she was dancing down the ice on her final footwork. The fans cheered so loudly they drowned out the end of her music, jumping to their feet when she finished. Kwan pumped her fist, shook her head and clapped her hands as if to say, "I did it."

When she saw her 6.0s she beamed. Kwan got seven 6.0s this week, the last major competition where the century-old scoring method will be used. The International Skating Union has already gone to a points-based system, and U.S. Figure Skating plans to follow suit.

"Sweet!" Kwan said, referring to her 6.0s. "I'm going to be sad when the 6.0 system goes away."

The title was Kwan's eighth straight, extending her own record.

She's also a five-time world champion, and has silver and bronze medals from the Olympics. The only hole in her impressive résumé is Olympic gold, but the 2006 Games are only a year away.

Cohen has yet to win a major title — U.S., world or Olympic — and she won't ever get one if she keeps skating like this. She crashed hard on a triple lutz and had to put a hand down on the ice to keep from falling on her triple loop.

"I'm disappointed not to nail all the jumps, the I've been doing in practice," Cohen said. "It's not in my overall plan not to skate perfectly."

McGrady lifts Rockets late

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — Tracy McGrady scored 28 points and came up with a handful of clutch plays in the Houston Rockets' 73-67 victory over the San Antonio Spurs on Saturday night.

McGrady sparked the Rockets' strong finish by converting a three-point play, making a couple of free throws and then finding Bob Sura all alone behind the arc for a three-pointer that gave Houston a 64-57 lead with 2:49 to go.

He nailed a clinching three-point shot of his own with 34.6 seconds left, putting Houston ahead 69-61. McGrady left his right hand lingering in the air a little longer than usual and smiled as the crowd cheered.

Yao Ming added 13 points and Dikembe Mutombo came off the bench for 15 rebounds, helping the Rockets win a season-high fourth straight game and move three games above .500 (20-17) for the first time this season.

They also won consecutive games against San Antonio for the first time since 1997.

Tony Parker led the Spurs with 21 points and six assists, while Tim Duncan had 18 points and 12 rebounds.

The Spurs were held to a season-low point total, going only 24-for-68 (35 percent) from the floor, including 2-for-16 (13 percent) from three-point range.

San Antonio's offensive woes certainly weren't helped by the injury of guard Manu Ginobili, who left in the third quarter after bruising his right quadriceps and

He played only one minute after halftime, then was taken out. Ginobili finished with six points, three rebounds and three steals.

Lakers 104, Warriors 102: Lamar Odom made a driving layup with 1.3 seconds left, and the Lakers won their first game of the season without Kobe Bryant in Oakland.

Odom had 27 points and 12 rebounds, and he drew a charge from Adonal Foyle with 12.6 seconds left to set up his final shot. Odom then got the ball at the top of the key, drove past Cliff Robinson and made a hanging layup to lift the Lakers to their fourth victory in five games.

Chuck Atkins added 20 points for Los Angeles, which placed Bryant on the injured list before the game with a sprained ankle. He's expected to miss about three weeks.

Derek Fisher had a career-high 29 points against his former team, making Speedy Claxton had 15, but missed a long jumper at the buzzer.

Timberwolves 92, Trail Blazers 84: In Minneapolis, Latrell Sprewell scored 25 points, including a pair of key three-pointers in the fourth quarter, to lead Minnesota.

Kevin Garnett had 17 points and 10 rebounds, and Eddie Griffin grabbed a career-high 18 rebounds for the Timberwolves.

The Timberwolves also took advantage of a thinned Portland front-line to gain the edge in the rebounding battle 44-32. Missing frontcourt players Zach Randolph, Shaquille O'Neal and Darius Miles due to injury, Portland went to a four-guard lineup through much of the second half.

Pistons 99, 76ers 95: Tayshaun Prince's short jumper with 24.5 seconds left put host Detroit ahead and his two free throws sealed the Pistons' fifth straight victory.

Richard Hamilton scored 25 points for the Pistons, who have won 12 of 16 since falling to .500 on Dec. 11.

Magic 85, Pacers 84: In Indianapolis, Hedo Turkoglu had 23 points and Grant Hill added 19 points and eight rebounds as Orlando held off a furious finish by the Pacers.

Reggie Miller missed a chance to tie the game from the foul line with 3.3 seconds left and Jamaal Tinsley's desperation heave from halfcourt banked in, but it was ruled he shot after the buzzer.

Jermaine O'Neal had 38 points and 15 rebounds to lead Indiana, which had a two-game winning streak snapped.

Kings 99, Clippers 95: In Sacramento, Calif., Chris Webber had a season-high 36 points and 10 rebounds to lead Sacramento.

Peja Stojakovic made four three-pointers and had 24 points, and Curt Muehlebach scored 13 points in his Kings debut.

Mavericks 98, Nets 93: Dirk Nowitzki scored 26 points, including 16 in the second half after having X-rays on his left ankle, to lead Dallas at home.

Jerry Stackhouse had 20 points and 10 rebounds, and Michael Finley added 16 points to help the Mavericks snap a two-game losing streak and beat the Nets for the 10th straight time.

Jason Kidd had 10 points, 11 assists and 10 rebounds for New Jersey, the 61st career triple-double for the NBA's active leader.

Bulls 86, Knicks 84: In Chicago, Eddy Curry's layup with 2.4 seconds left gave Chicago its sixth straight victory.

The winning streak is Chicago's best since Michael Jordan led the team to 13 consecutive wins late in the 1997-98 championship season. The Bulls, who lost their first nine games this season, have won 12 of 15 overall.

Andres Nocioni set up the winning score by blocking Trevor Ariza's jump shot. Tyson Chandler saved the ball from going out of bounds and threw it blindly to Kirk Hinrich, who fed Nocioni as he raced up the floor. Nocioni then passed to Curry, who put the ball to the basket and put the Bulls ahead.

Chandler blocked Nasser Mohamed's shot with time running out to set it.

Hawks 103, Bobcats 95: In Atlanta, Al Harrington scored 22 points, and Antoine Walker added 21 points and 11 rebounds to help the Hawks beat expansion Charlotte.

The Hawks led 88-65 with 8:51 left to play, but had to survive a late scare as the Bobcats cut the lead to single digits in the final minute. Jason Hart scored 13 of his 19 points in the final period to lead the comeback attempt.

Grizzlies 101, Bucks 82: Jason Williams had 25 points and eight assists, and the Grizzlies used a team-record 13 three-pointers to beat the Bucks in Memphis.

Pau Gasol added 22 points and eight rebounds, and Bonzi Wells scored 21 points for Memphis, which won for the eighth time in nine games.

Cavaliers 84, Jazz 71: LeBron James scored 10 of his 27 points in the fourth quarter and the visiting Cavaliers rallied from a 19-point deficit to beat the Jazz.

The Cavaliers outscored Utah 31-14 in the final quarter and held former teammate Carlos Boozer to just three points in the second half.

Shigeki Maruyama lines up his putt with his caddy during the third round of the Sony Open Saturday. A hole-in-one helped Maruyama finished the day in first place at 10 under par.

Ace helps Maruyama keep positive approach, lead

BY DOUG FERGUSON

The Associated Press

HONOLULU — Shigeki Maruyama didn't panic when he made a double bogey on the first hole and quickly lost his one-shot lead in the Sony Open. He simply figured he would get it back with a couple of birdies.

Turns out it only took one swing. Maruyama made a hole-in-one on the 202-yard fourth hole, part of a wild day at windy Waialae Country Club that kept his large contingent of Japanese fans thoroughly entertained until his 40-foot eagle putt on the 18th hole Saturday stopped on the edge of the cup.

The tap-in birdie gave him a 68, and left him in the same place he started — with a one-shot lead.

"It was a really bad start," Maruyama said. "I tried to think positive things. Fortunately, I had a hole-in-one. That really saved my game. I could think positive after that."

He was at 10-under 200, with plenty of work left.

Brett Quigley saved par after driving into the TV compund and shot a 68, leaving him one shot behind with a great chance to end his 6-220 streak on the PGA Tour.

Not many are better prepared. Quigley spent the last month playing golf with his family — including uncle Dana Quigley on the Champions Tour, which means he played every day. He's trying to treat the first full-field event of the year as one of those marathon golf sessions with his uncle.

"We all have a tendency out here [to think], 'Oh my gosh, it's a PGA Tour event. You have to play perfect.' In reality, it's not even close to that," Quigley said. "I haven't attached any meaning to anything. And that's when I play well."

Paul Azinger, the 2000 Sony Open champion, worked his low, penetrating ball flight to perfection in the wind. He was among four players who had a share of the lead at one point, finished with nine straight pars and had a 67 to finish two shots behind.

"If it's my time to do it, I'll do it," Azinger said. "I haven't gotten ahead of myself yet."

Among those in the large crowd following Maruyama was Isao Aoki, inducted last year into the World Golf Hall of Fame and the last Japanese player to win the Sony

Open. Maruyama was 14 when he watched Aoki hole a wedge for eagle on the last hole to beat Jack Kemner by one.

"I saw him," Maruyama said. "It gives me great pressure."

He could also get that looking behind him on the leaderboard.

Among the seven players within five shots of the lead was Vijay Singh, the No. 1 player in the world, who quietly surged into contention with a 67.

Singh might have been closer except for taking two shots to get out of a bunker on No. 16, courtesy of a plugged lie, and missing a 6-foot birdie on the last.

For most of the contenders, the first full-field event of the year is ripe with opportunity.

■ Quigley is the only player among the top seven who has never won.

■ Azinger finished No. 126 on the money list last year and does not have full status for the first time since he won Q-school 20 years ago.

Former Masters champion Larry Mize also has no status. He got a sponsor's exemption to the Sony Open, shot a 64 on Saturday and was at 7-under 203, along with Robert Gomez (68).

Charles Howell III also shot a 64 and was another shot behind.

Ernie Els took himself out of contention for a record third straight victory at the Sony Open. He had to rally on the back nine for an even-par 70, leaving him eight shots behind.

Otherwise, the Sony Open got back to normal — all 78 players who made the cut are men, all have driver's licenses.

Fifteen-year-old Michelle Wie showed up at Waialae, but only to do a television interview with a Japanese network.

"We're on our way to the mall," father B.J. Wie said. "Some meeting friends to go shopping."

The electricity came from Maruyama, who had a large following and kept them in suspense all day.

Quigley looked as though he might drop out of the pack. He drove into the trees on No. 3 and had to scramble for bogey, then missed a 3-foot birdie putt on the next hole. But he kept it together.

He surged into the lead with three straight birdies, all inside 10 feet. Then after dropping a shot on the 15th by missing the green, he drove into the TV compund on No. 16 and saved par with a tough 12-foot-2 to easily keep in range of his first PGA Tour victory.

Els defends Wie's play; exemption is worthwhile

BY DOUG FERGUSON

The Associated Press

HONOLULU — The disappointment of missing the cut by seven shots in the Sony Open turned into disgust as Michelle Wie walked slowly across the parking lot in darkness, waiting for her parents to take her home.

All her practice rounds at Waialae Country Club were of little use in the strong Kona wind that came from the opposite direction and changed a course she thought she knew better than anyone.

And then there was the putting. "I hit so many putts that were right there. I mean, right there," she said. "I couldn't make anything."

Hmmm. Sounds a lot like Tiger Woods. The 15-year-old passed, then broke into a big smile as she recalled all the putts Woods missed last week at Kapalua.

"Oh, I get it," she said. "That's funny."

Ernie Els came up with another comparison between Wie and Woods.

The Big Easy finished his second round Friday and glanced over his shoulder at the large, leathery-birdie on the right of the 18th green, which had Wie's name at the bottom.

She was 7 over with six holes left, no chance of making it.

When asked about her future, Els went on the defensive.

"Look, let's put this in perspective," Els said. "She's 15 years old. She's a girl. She's playing on the PGA Tour. Tiger Woods, I don't think he ever made a cut on tour except maybe in the Masters."

Woods didn't play his first PGA Tour event until he was 16, missing the cut in the 1992 Nissan Open at Riviera with rounds of 72-75.

"Did I belong out there? No. I wasn't good enough," Woods said. "But it was an experience that I wanted to take advantage of. I received a lot to me because I thought I played pretty good for me, at the time. I was 17 back from Davis [Love III], so I figured I needed a little work."

Wie played in three PGA Tour events each of the next two years, only breaking par once, a 1-under 70 at the 1994 Buick Classic when he was 18. He finally made his first cut a year later when he tied for 41st at the Masters and was low amateur.

Wie made her PGA Tour debut last year at 14, when rounds of 72-68 left her one shot away from making the cut at the Sony Open.

The tournament waited until last month to make official what everyone expected — another sponsor's exemption for a high school sophomore who generates record crowds at Waialae.

The novelty of a teenager playing on tour had worn off. The buzz was generated by expectations she might become the first female to make the cut on the PGA Tour since Babe Zaharias in the 1945 Tucson Open.

But everything went wrong from the start. Wie got the bad end of the draw — even Thursday when the wind gusts to 25 mph, late on Friday after showers made Waialae play even longer. The rough was thick, and she simply isn't strong enough to get the ball on the green, or at least get it within 40 feet.

And she missed the 12 good birdie chances she had. She made only three birdies and finished at 9-over 149, tied for 128th, better than 14 men. The cut was 2 over par, and Wie was 17 shots behind leader Shigeki Maruyama.

A year ago, Wie tied for 80th — better than 47 men and 11 shots behind the leader.

"I definitely want to play next year," Wie said. "I just want to have another chance at it, because I know that I can do better than this."

Should she get another exemption? Els said the kid should be allowed to come back every year unless her game goes south, and no one sees that happening.

Competing against the best men in the world, she doesn't look terribly out of place. Competing against the best women, she fits right in. We only finished out of the top 20 only once in seven LPGA events last year, and would have finished in the top 50 on the money list had she not been an amateur.

"She's so good for the island. She's so good for the tournament," Els said. "She's having a tough time because of the wind, but she's not making a mess of herself."

That is not throwing an invite away. Only the real skeptics will think that way.

That is not throwing an invite away. Only the real skeptics will think that way.

What Els saw in playing 36 holes with Wie was maturity — more in the person than in the golfer, although ultimately the two fit together. His one bit of advice for Wie, and those around her, was to turn her loose.

"Hopefully, she's at a point where she can play golf," Els said. "David Leadbetter, he's got the golf savvy. He can step back and let her play. She's got everything there."

Tom Lehman agreed. It was Lehman who first gave the teen prodigy her nickname — the "Big Wiesy," because her swing reminded Lehman so much of Els. He first played with her in a junior pro-am when Wie was 12, and has been amazed by her progress.

"My first impression — it was to let her alone and let her play golf," Lehman said. "That was my first feeling, and that's still my feeling. She has a natural ability that you rarely ever see to swing a golf club. There's no need to make any changes at all, except perfecting what she has."

"She's like a thoroughbred. Let her run."

Stoudamire saves No. 1 Arizona

BY BOB BAUM

The Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — Salim Stoudamire felt himself going into one of his infamous mental funks against UCLA, but talked himself out of it. What followed was one of the greatest shooting performance of the college basketball season.

Stoudamire capped a 24-point second half with a three-pointer with 25 seconds left to give No. 17 Arizona a 76-73 victory over UCLA on Saturday, snapping the Bruins' four-game Pac-10 winning streak.

"I was upset in the first half and it affected my game," Stoudamire said. "In the beginning of the second half, the coach took me out. I sat and thought about many instances where this had happened. ... I just told myself, 'You've got to pick it up from this point.' And I did."

The left-handed shooter, who entered the game as the No. 2 three-point shooter in the country at 56.2 percent, finished with 32 points. He scored 24 of the Wildcats' final 29 points.

"He is the best shooter in the country, hands down," Arizona coach Lute Olson said. "They talk about the guy at Duke [J.J. Redick], but I will put Salim up against him anytime."

Stoudamire, who scored 34 points the last time he played UCLA, is the cousin of Damon Stoudamire, who set a franchise record with 54 points for the Portland Trail Blazers on Friday night.

"I watched the game, actually," Stoudamire said. "That definitely inspired me."

After Stoudamire's three-pointer from the top of the key put the Wildcats up, Arizona's Hassan Adams stole a UCLA pass and was fouled. Arizona was called for a technical foul, though, when two players rushed the court in celebration with 12 seconds left.

"We have to work on telling our freshmen not to go on the floor until the game is over," Olson said.

However, Jordan Farmer of UCLA missed his two, and the game ended before the Bruins could get off another shot.

Stoudamire was 9-for-11 from the field in the second half, most of the shots mid-range jumpers, and was 11-for-16 for the game. He also made all six of his free throws.

Channing Frye added 15 points for the Wildcats (43-4, 1), all in the first half. Ivan Radenovic scored eight points and grabbed a career-high 14 rebounds for Arizona.

Dijon Thompson led UCLA with 27 points on 10-for-16 shooting and had 10 rebounds. Farmer added 15 points and Aaron Affalo had 13 for the Bruins (10-4, 4-2), who shot 61 percent (17-for-28) in the first half but just 27 percent (8-for-30) in the second.

"They stepped up their intensity, and we just missed shots," Farmer said. "We had a lot of good looks that we missed, but a lot of credit to them, they played hard in the second half."

The Bruins committed 23 turnovers in losing at McKale Center for the eighth consecutive season.

"Stoudamire was so hot they were just playing to him," UCLA coach Ben Howland said, "getting him shots and he was making them. He was very, very good."

Stoudamire scored 17 of his team's 18 points in a 9½-minute stretch in the second half, while the Bruins went 9-16 without a field goal, missing 11 consecutive shots.

He scored the first 12 points in a 15-3 run that put Arizona up 68-61 on Adams' steal and three-point play with 4:04 left.

Frye's goaltending on Thompson's short jumper ended UCLA's field goal drought and triggered a 7-0 spurt that tied it at 68 when Thompson made two free throws with 1:38 to go. Stoudamire sank two free throws to give Arizona a 70-68 lead with 1:28 left, and two more with 50 seconds remaining to put the Wildcats ahead 72-68.

Mustafa Shakur made one of two free throws to make it 73-68 with 40 seconds left.

But Thompson made a 10-footer, then Adams threw the ball away against UCLA's press and Affalo hit a three-pointer from the corner to tie it at 73 with 16 seconds to play.

Stoudamire calmly dribbled the ball up court, then let fly beyond the three-point line for the game-winner.

Freshman Aaron Affalo acknowledged he gave Stoudamire too much room. But Affalo had seen Stoudamire dribble past him for pull-up jumpers, and got fouled going to the hoop.

Arizona's Salim Stoudamire center is grabbed and congratulated by his teammates Channing Frye (45) and Mustafu Shakur (15) for making a three-point in the closing moments to beat UCLA.

"I just didn't want to foul," Affalo said. "He was about 30-plus feet out. I figured he would at least, with 6 seconds left, penetrate and maybe pull up then. I didn't think he would walk and shoot from the volleyball line or wherever he shot it from."

UCLA led most of the game but never by more than eight points.

Oklahoma State's win moves Sutton past mentor Iba

The Associated Press

STILLWATER, Okla. — After 50 many wins on the court at Gallagher-Iba Arena, Eddie Sutton's name will be forever associated with the hardwood floor.

After Sutton passed mentor Henry Iba for seventh place in career coaching wins in an 83-73 victory over Iowa State on Saturday.

Oklahoma State officials announced that the court would be named after the legendary coach.

"It means a great deal," Sutton said. "It is quite an honor." So, John Graham and Ivan McFarlin each scored 20 points as Sutton won his 768th game to pass Iba, his mentor who coached him during his 36 years at Oklahoma State.

Iba was present when Sutton was hired at Oklahoma State in 1990, but died on Jan. 15, 1993 — exactly 12 years before Sutton would pass him in career wins.

"Those three years, I was so fortunate to have the opportunity to really get closer to him," Sutton said. "Mr. Iba was such a wonderful man, but at times he was pretty private."

"When we'd send those student managers out to get him, he'd come down to practice and we had great conversations. He certainly gave me as a player and then as a graduate assistant. All the things I learned gave me a very strong foundation as far as a basketball philosophy."

Sutton was a little disappointed in the manner his team used to earn him win No. 768. After building a 19-point second-half lead, the Cowboys (13-1, 3-0 Big 12) lacked the stingy, controlling defense that Sutton — and before him, Iba — instilled at Oklahoma State.

No. 7 Syracuse 75, Providence 71: Hakim Warrick had 25 points, 12 rebounds and a key steal with 3.3 seconds left for the visiting Orange (17-1, 4-0 Big East), who won their 10th consecutive game.

Dwight Brewington had 21 and eight rebounds for Providence, but he went 4-for-14 from three-point range. Ryan Gomes, who averages 21 points, had just 14 for Providence (9-7, 0-3).

No. 9 Kentucky 76, Georgia 55: At Athens, Ga., Patrick Sparks scored 15 points for the Bulldogs (6-8), who dropped to 1-4 in the SEC for the first time since 1998.

Levi Stokes had 18 points for the Bulls (6-8), who dropped to 1-4 in the SEC for the first time since 1998.

No. 10 Texas 63, Nebraska 53: Freshman Daniel Gibson scored all 12 of his points over the final 14:32 as the Longhorns (13-3, 2-1 Big 12) bounced back from a 74-63 road loss to Texas A&M on Wednesday.

Joe McCray was 5-for-12 from three-point range and had 21 points and 11 rebounds for Nebraska (8-5, 1-1).

No. 11 Mississippi St. 80, Arkansas 55: Lawrence Roberts had 17 points and 10 rebounds and the Bulldogs (15-3, 3-1 Southeastern Conference) won their ninth straight at home.

Jonathan Modica had 14 points to lead Arkansas (13-3, 3-1 SEC), which lost its third straight and was held almost 24 points below their scoring average.

No. 12 Connecticut 78, Rutgers 66: Josh Boone had 20 points, 12 rebounds and six blocked shots and Charlie Villanueva had 14 points, tied his career-high with 14 rebounds and blocked shots for the best Huskies (10-3, 2-1 Big East), who outscored Rutgers 58-28 in the paint.

Marqus Webb had 16 points for the Scarlet Knights (6-7, 0-3).

No. 14 Washington 108, Oregon St. 66: At Seattle, The Sunbats matched a career high with 26 points, going 6-of-7 from three-point range, and Jamaal Williams added a career-high 24 points for Washington.

Beavers coach Jay John left the arena in an ambulance at half-time after complaining of chest pain and shortness of breath.

The 46-year-old coach was examined by an on-site doctor before paramedics were called.

No. 16 Gonzaga 86, Pepperdine 62: At Spokane, Wash., Gonzaga scored 26 points, and Ronny Turiaf added 19 points and 10 rebounds, his fifth double-double of the season, for Gonzaga.

Gonzaga (13-3, 3-1 WCC) has won six in a row against Pepperdine since 2000. Glen McGowan scored 15 points for Pepperdine (12-7, 2-2).

No. 19 Louisville 69, No. 18 Cincinnati 66: Cincinnati, Taquan Dean was 7-for-13 from three-point range and scored 25 points for the Cardinals (14-3, 3-1 Conference USA), who were trailed by 17 points in the first half.

Nick Williams led Cincinnati (14-2, 3-1) with 18 points.

No. 20 Pittsburgh 67, Seton Hall 63: Chevron Troutman had 23 points for the host Panthers (12-2, 2-1 Big East), who snapped a two-game losing streak at home and won their 14th of their 14 in the Petersen Events Center.

Massachusetts 76, No. 21 George Washington 74, OT: At Washington, Rashawn Freeman, who had season-highs of 27 points and 15 rebounds, scored with less than a second left in overtime for the Minutemen (8-6, 2-2 Atlantic 10), who led by as many as 18 points in the second half.

J.R. Pinnock scored 15 points to lead the Colonials (11-3, 3-1).

No. 22 Marquette 66, South Florida 64: Todd Townsend's three-point play with 5 seconds to play lifted host Marquette.

Travis Diener led Marquette (14-2, 2-1 Conference USA) with 24 points, and Townsend finished with 10. Terrance Leather led USF (8-6, 1-2) with 25 points.

No. 24 Iowa 66, Minnesota 60: Pierre Pierce scored 18 points for the host Hawkeyes (13-1, 2-2 Big Ten), who won despite going the final 10:45 without a field goal.

Jeff Hagen had 15 points and 12 rebounds for the Gophers (12-4, 2-1).

No. 25 Oklahoma 65, Baylor 61: At Waco, Texas, Drew Lauderdale scored a season-high 20 points, including a three-pointer and two free throws in the final 45 seconds, for the Sooners (13-2, 2-0 Big 12), who won their seventh straight overall and 21st in a row against Baylor.

Freshman Aaron Bruce had 21 points for the Bears (8-5, 0-2).

No. 1 Illinois uses its Head to improve to school best 18-0

BY RICK GANO

The Associated Press

EVANSTON, Ill. — Luther Head's high-rising moves to the rim and soft jumpers from the perimeter led No. 1 Illinois to another victory and a place in the school's record books.

"We love it. We've done something no one else has done," Head said Saturday after the Illini's 78-66 win over Northwestern gave them an 18-0 record — the best start in school history.

"Just to accomplish something no one has, we've got something to talk about. But we still have a lot left to accomplish," said Head, who finished with a season-high 26 points, 17 in the second half.

The Illini had tied the school's 1988-89 Final Four team on Wednesday with their 17th straight win. Now, the record's all theirs.

The 6-foot-3 Head used his great leaping ability to score from the inside, hit four three-pointers and played hustling defense for the Illini, who finally pulled away in the latter stages of the second half against the scrappy Wildcats (8-8, 1-3 Big Ten).

"The whole team loves changes. We play well when there is something to prove," said Head, who scored a total of seven points in two games against Northwestern last season.

On Saturday, he was 9-for-14 from the field.

"Nobody cares who the high scorer is. We've got a lot of guys who can score," he said.

In a raucous Welsh-Ryan Arena filled with both purple-clad Northwestern students and orange-wearing Illini followers, Illinois trailed only twice — early in the game — and led by eight at half-time.

Last season in Evanston, Illinois was ahead of Northwestern by nine at the half, but the Wildcats rallied for a 10-point victory.

Not this time. Illinois' experience and poise kept it from happening again, even though Head and Deron Williams picked up their third fouls early in the second half.

"The big difference is that we're a year older and we understand what it means to win on the road," Illinois coach Bruce Weber said. "They're tough to play here. ... It's tough for anybody to win on the road in the Big Ten. So, it's rewarding."

Roger Powell scored 15 points and De Brown had 12 for the Illini, who are 4-0 in the conference and have won 14 straight Big Ten games.

Leading scorer Vedran Vukusic, led to just two free throws in the first half, led Northwestern with 20 points, while Davor Duvancic added 13. The Wildcats shot 57 percent but still lost, partly because they had 16 turnovers. Northwestern fell to 0-13 all-time against No. 1-ranked teams.

Vukusic saluted Illinois' performance this season, while adding a qualifier.

"They're No. 1 and they're going to be for a while," he said. "But they're beatable."

After Northwestern got within six points early in the second half, Head drove for a basket and then took a nice pass from Williams for a high-rising slam as the Illini went back up by 10.

Silicic to five in a shot and hit a three-pointer to close it. But James Augustine got inside for a basket and converted a three-point play, dousing Northwestern's comeback attempt.

"When they made a play, we made a play. When they made a play the crowd would go crazy and you got to do something to shut them up," Brown said.

Colorado 'overmatched' against No. 2 Jayhawks

BY EDDIE PELLIS

The Associated Press

BOULDER, Colo. — With Kansas leading by one point, Colorado worked the ball to its best player, who shot a baseline jumper that hit nothing but air. Moments later, Keith Langford of the Jayhawks made a nearly impossible 10-foot runner to set up a three-point play.

Not only was that the key sequence in a 76-61 victory for No. 2 Kansas on Saturday, it was the kind of game-changing series of events that often illustrates the difference between the great programs and the ones that long to be.

"Sometimes, you're just over-matched," Colorado coach Ricardo Patton said. "There's a reason they're the number two team in the country."

Playing his second game with a sore on his broken left thumb, Wayne Simien led the Jayhawks (13-0, 3-0 Big 12) with 23 points and 17 rebounds.

Langford's three-point play after Keith Copeland's miss set the stage for a 14-point afternoon during which he came through big seemingly every time things got tight.

"I just want clutch. Keith is my guy," Simien said. "He not only creates opportunities for himself, he creates opportunities for others in clutch situations."

The Buffs (8-6, 0-3) played well in a nationally televised home game of the season in front of a packed crowd, at least half of which was cheering for the Jayhawks. Those fans saw their team stay on their best start since opening 22-0 in 1996-97. Kansas, which has "dominated the Buffalos since the beginning of time," according to the Colorado game notes, won for the 31st time in the last 32 games of this series.

"Their guys just made plays," Copeland said. "I think everyone can see we played hard. The great players and they came through."

Indeed, this one wasn't as easy as the final score indicated, and at times things looked uncomfortable in the KU camp.

Behind Simien's nice effort, Kansas took a 17-point lead in the first half, but the Jayhawks still received a major tongue lashing in the locker room at halftime.

During Colorado's comeback early in the second half, Kansas coach Bill Self pulled Langford — who is already in his doghouse for comments he made about officiating last week — and the two had an animated argument on the bench.

Shortly afterward, Langford started dominating.

The senior guard, coming off a concussion last Sunday in a win at No. 9 Kentucky, converted his three-point play with 10½ minutes left. On Kansas' next trip down, Langford hit a three-pointer to put the Jayhawks ahead 51-46. A few minutes later, he somehow got another runner to fall as he was being bothered by a defender. The Buffs then start a 9-0 run that put the game out of reach.

"He labored all day, and we

weren't getting rebounds and the altitude affected us," Self said. "But when it got to one point, Langford really came through and made some big shots."

Led by Clean Edley's relentless work, the Buffs grabbed 22 offensive rebounds to stay competitive despite missing a variety of open shots, especially in the first half, when they went 8-for-34 from the field.

Edley finished with five points and 12 boards, six on the offensive glass. Copeland had 22 points and 11 rebounds and Richard Roby scored 14 points for Colorado.

"We definitely didn't shoot well from the field," Roby said. "Good teams have to find a way to win games if the jump shots aren't falling."

Wake Forest's Chris Paul (3) drives past North Carolina player Raymond Felton (2) and Javon Williams (21) during the first half Saturday.

Paul, No. 2 Wake dominate Heels

BY KEITH PARSONS

The Associated Press

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Chris Paul wanted to win, and he got a reminder on just how to make that happen from Wake Forest coach Skip Prosser.

"Coach always tells us this is a team game played by individuals," Paul said. "He says you have to beat your guy."

No problem there.

Paul dominated his point guard matchup with Raymond Felton, Taron Downey had a season-high 18 points and the fourth-ranked Demon Deacons ran away from No. 3 North Carolina 95-82 on Saturday.

Wake Forest (15-1, 4-0) set an Atlantic Coast Conference record by making all 32 free throws — falling two short of tying the NCAA mark — with Paul finishing 9-for-9. The 6-foot sophomore finished with 26 points, eight assists, six rebounds and five steals to overshadow Felton, who shot only 5-for-18 and had 16 points.

"He is a very, very, very talented player with an excellent work ethic," Prosser said. "He also can read and watch television, so he knew the magnitude of this game, and I think he stepped up to the challenge."

Downey gave his team an unexpected boost. A senior whose playing time decreased with the emergence of Paul, he came in averaging only 7.6 points.

"I've said before and I'll say it again, he's one of the most selfless players I've ever coached," Prosser said. "And for that, he's also one of the most popular among his teammates."

Downey beat his average by making three consecutive three-pointers during a 90-second stretch of the first half to give the Deacons their first lead at 14-13, and the score was tied only once after that.

"Big-time players like to play on a big stage," Downey said. "When the stage is big, I play better."

The Tar Heels (14-2, 3-1), who lost for the first time since their opener at Santa Clara, struggled throughout with foul trouble. Jackie Manuel, Marvin Williams and David Noel all fouled out, and Rashad McCants finished with four.

McCants scored 19 points and Williams added 15 for North Carolina.

"We just have to put everything in perspective," said Tar Heels center Sean May, who was held to nine points. "It's one game in conference play. We can't hold on to this forever, but we do get to think about some things, things we did wrong and how we didn't have each other's backs out there."

Because of a quirk in the scheduling for the newly expanded ACC, this was the only meeting of the season for the teams, the first time since 1922 they haven't played a home-and-home.

McCants picked up his fourth foul about a minute into the second half and sat on the bench for 10 minutes. When he returned, he tried to rally North Carolina by himself, scoring 12 points down the stretch.

"In the second half, we were much more competitive," Tar Heels coach Roy Williams said. "I'm disappointed in the result, but I think it was a heck of a college basketball game."

Falcons: Rams run out of gas against rested Atlanta

FALCONS, FROM BACK PAGE

"You saw a team that plays together," rookie coach Tom Moore said. "You saw a team that's pretty complete. We like to say in the locker room that the best player on our team is our team. We proved that tonight with the way we played."

The Falcons advanced to the NFC championship game for just the second time in the franchise's 39-year history. They will host Minnesota or travel to Philadelphia next weekend for a spot in the Super Bowl.

The other time Atlanta made it this far was the 1998 season. The "Dirty Birds" got all the way to the Super Bowl, only to get blown out by Denver in John Elway's final game.

Now, a team known mostly for its inept play is on the verge of making it to Jacksonville, Fla., with a first-year coach. And speaking of Moore, he finally gave his family a playoff victory.

His dad, Jim Mora, took New Orleans and Indianapolis to the playoffs six times, only to go one-up each time. He's the only 100-win coach in NFL history without one postseason victory on his résumé.

Well, his son has a 1-0 record in the playoffs. And his dad, who was at the Georgia Dome, must have been pretty proud.

St. Louis won its last two regular-season games just to make the playoffs. And his dad, who was at the Georgia Dome, must have been pretty proud.

It didn't take long for those fresh legs to pay off, especially when matched against the Rams' weary defense and special teams.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH/AP

Atlanta Falcons' Allen Rossum, center, returns a punt 68 yards for a touchdown in the second quarter against the St. Louis Rams on Saturday. Rossum set an NFL record with 152 yards on three punt returns.

"I don't think I've been part of a loss like this," defensive end Bryce Fisher said. "We played like we had handcuffs on."

Vick's big run came on Atlanta's third offensive play, setting up an 18-yard touchdown pass to Alge Crumpler just three minutes into the game.

The tone was set for the first half. It resembled a track meet more than a football game. The Falcons led 28-17, the teams combining on the second-highest scoring half for a divisional-round game in league history.

Rossum did more running than anyone. The 5-foot-8 return specialist returned a punt 68 yards for a touchdown with less than a minute to go in the first half.

He wasn't done, setting an NFL playoff record with 152 yards on three punt returns—a staggering 50.7-yard average.

"I truly felt it all out on the field," Rossum said. "I'll have no trouble going to sleep tonight."

He had returns of 39 and 45 yards in the third quarter, setting up Vick's 6-yard touchdown pass to Peelle Price and Jay Feely's 38-yard field goal for a comfortable 38-17 lead.

Rossum broke the mark set by Minnesota's Anthony Carter, who had 143 yards in punt returns against the Saints during the 1987 season. In a fitting bit of symmetry, that was the first playoff loss for Mora's father.

Dunn rushed for 142 yards on just 17 carries, including the 62-yard touchdown that quickly eclipsed Vick's scamper for the longest in Falcons' playoff history. By the time Dunn was done, he had eclipsed Jamal Anderson's franchise record of 113 yards in a playoff game.

The Falcons looked every bit like the league's top running team, finishing with 327 of their 397 yards on the ground—one of the greatest rushing games in playoff history.

Vick passed for only 82 yards but was an efficient 12-for-16.

"This is a very exciting time for us," he said. "The whole world is watching. This is something we've hoped for 21 years. Why not go out there and enjoy the moment?"

Vick's only blemish was a fumble at the end of a run, and the Rams' defense had nothing to do with it. He simply lost the ball after stumbling to the turf with out-bing touched.

Otherwise, Vick loomed large—even when he didn't have the ball. The Rams assigned a linebacker or defensive back to keep an eye on him, but that created some huge holes for the running backs.

"They tried to play us in a certain defense and we were kind of like, 'I'm going to Vick said. "I backed-fired on them."

Steelers: Star-crossed Jets left shaking heads

STEELERS, FROM BACK PAGE

Reed's 33-yarder with just more than 12 minutes gone in overtime won it and was his 19th successful conversion in a row, tying Gary Anderson's team record.

The loss will go down as one of the most excruciating in the Jets' star-crossed history. Brien's twin misses were doubly stunning because of his gutty team on the verge of its biggest upset since Broadway Joe's guaranteed win over the Colts in the January 1969 Super Bowl.

"I've never seen anything like it," Steelers linebacker Larry Foote said. "I'm not going to say it was a miracle, because that's crippled people with awe and vainglorious, the blind seeing. But that's the closest thing to it I've ever seen."

Brien's 47-yarder with 1:58 remaining hit the goal post, but Roethlisberger gave the Jets the ball right back when his off-line throw was intercepted by David Barrett—just the kind of mistake rookie quarterbacks are supposed to make in the playoffs, but Big Ben had rarely made during his 13-0 rookie season. The Jets then didn't have the distance," Brien said, referring to the 47-yarder.

The second one didn't go in. The first one didn't go in."

Brien's 28-yard kick in overtime beat San Diego last week—yes, by the same 20-17 score—but he hit a 42-yard FG to halt Pittsburgh's early momentum and make it 10-3 Pittsburgh early in the second quarter. He was 24-for-29 during the season.

"I had confidence in him, he made the one last week and I thought he could make it," Jets coach Herman Edwards said. "He was the kind of guy in a spot where there was nothing else we could really do. We had to kick the field goal. He's been a good kicker for us. It was just a tough day."

The Jets became the first NFL team to play three consecutive overtime games, including their regular-season ending loss in St. Louis. They dropped to 0-7 in Pittsburgh and 2-16 all-time against the Steelers.

The Steelers are 1-3 in AFC title games under coach Bill Cowher, losing all three at home as his favorites, but linebacker Joey Porter senses this season will be different—and not just because they have won a team-record 15 in a row. They were only the fourth NFL team in 26 years to go 15-1 during the regular season.

The Steelers won four Super Bowls in six seasons from 1974-79, but they have returned only once since, losing to Dallas after the '95 season.

The Jets will wonder for years why they're not going to the AFC title game.

"This is about as frustrated as I've ever been in my career," said NFL rushing champion Curtis Martin, who was out-rushed by Jerome Bettis 101-77 in a matchup of two of the NFL's top five career rushers. "Right now I feel there is no end to my anger.... We left our hearts out there today."

And they left with a loss that might take more than an offseason to forget.

"I just feel bad for the team. I'll be fine," Brien said. "I just feel bad for the guys that played so well, played so hard and came up short."

Roethlisberger finished 17-for-30 for 181 yards and two touchdowns.

"I did everything I could to lose the game," Roethlisberger said. "I've got to play better. That was terrible. The game we played today is not going to cut it."

PITTSBURGH — The Pittsburgh Steelers' greatest season since the 1970s was all but lost, Ben Roethlisberger's unbeaten rookie streak seemed to be over. Then Doug Brien missed the biggest kick he'll likely ever try.

Twice.

Jeff Reed did what Brien couldn't do — make a game-winning field goal — and the Steelers somehow beat the New York Jets 20-17 Saturday in a remarkable overtime playoff game filled with wild swings in momentum and emotion.

Roethlisberger overcame two huge interceptions — one for a touchdown and another that appeared to doom the Steelers late in the fourth quarter — to lead a decisive drive that began at their own 13 and sent Pittsburgh to next Sunday's AFC championship game at home against New England or Indianapolis.

Pittsburgh Steelers kicker Jeff Reed, center, is mobbed by teammates Saturday after his 33-yard field goal in overtime beat the New York Jets 20-17.

Dewayne Robertson of the New York Jets hangs his head as his team fell to the Pittsburgh Steelers 20-17 in overtime in an AFC divisional playoff Saturday at Heinz Field in Pittsburgh. Jets kicker Doug Brien missed a 47-yard field goal attempt with 1:58 remaining and a 43-yarder on the last play of regulation.

Vick, Falcons roll over Rams to advance to NFC title game

ATLANTA — Michael Vick rolled to the left, brushed aside a rusher like a pesky gnat and took off the other way. He didn't stop until 47 yards later.

The Atlanta Falcons were off and running — and their one-of-a-kind quarterback had plenty of teammates along for the ride.

Warrick Dunn ran for a 62-yard touchdown, Allen Rossum set an NFL playoff record for punt returns and the Falcons routed the St. Louis Rams 47-17 Saturday night.

Vick? He was right in the middle of things, of course, throwing two touchdown passes and running for 119 yards to break Donovan's McNabb's year-old record for rushing yards by a quarterback in a playoff game.

But Vick's teammates managed to escape his considerable shadow, putting Atlanta within one win of the Super Bowl.
